NEW QUESTION # 15
You are designing an inventory updates table in an Azure Synapse Analytics dedicated SQL pool. The table will have a clustered columnstore index and will include the following columns:
You identify the following usage patterns:
Analysts will most commonly analyze transactions for a warehouse.
Queries will summarize by product category type, date, and/or inventory event type.
You need to recommend a partition strategy for the table to minimize query times.
On which column should you partition the table?

- A. EventDate
- B. ProductCategoryTypeID
- C. EventTypeID
- D. WarehouseID

Answer: D

Explanation:
The number of records for each warehouse is big enough for a good partitioning.
Note: Table partitions enable you to divide your data into smaller groups of data. In most cases, table partitions are created on a date column.
When creating partitions on clustered columnstore tables, it is important to consider how many rows belong to each partition. For optimal compression and performance of clustered columnstore tables, a minimum of 1 million rows per distribution and partition is needed.
