You cannot afford to lose it when you need your job the most.

Snowflake SnowPro Advanced: Data Analyst Certification Exam Sample Questions (Q20-Q25):

NEW QUESTION # 20
You are tasked with ingesting data from a REST API that returns data in JSON format. The API requires authentication via an API key passed in the header and returns a large dataset, potentially exceeding Snowflake's recommended file size for optimal loading.

Furthermore, the API has rate limits, and exceeding them results in temporary blocking. What is the MOST efficient and reliable way to retrieve this data into Snowflake?

- A. Employ a third-party ETL tool that supports REST API connections, data partitioning, rate limiting, and Snowflake integration. Configure the tool to extract, transform, and load the data into Snowflake.
- B. Utilize Snowpipe with a REST API integration configured directly with the API endpoint. Snowflake will automatically handle the data retrieval and loading.
- C. Write a Snowpark stored procedure that invokes a Java UDF to connect to the REST API. Handle rate limiting and authentication within the Java UDF and use it to insert data directly into a Snowflake table.
- D. Use a Snowflake external function to directly call the API within a COPY INTO statement. Handle authentication and rate limiting within the external function's code.
- E. Create a Python script using Snowpark that connects to the API, handles authentication, rate limiting, and partitions the data into smaller files. Stage these files in cloud storage and then use COPY INTO to load them into Snowflake.

Answer: A,E

Explanation:
Options B and D offer the most robust solutions. Option B, using a Python script with Snowpark, allows for fine-grained control over authentication, rate limiting, and data partitioning before loading into Snowflake. Option D, utilizing a dedicated ETL tool, provides a pre-built and often more scalable solution for complex data ingestion scenarios, including handling authentication, rate limits, and data transformation. Option A is less scalable and maintainable. Option C is incorrect because Snowpipe is designed for continuous loading from cloud storage, not directly from REST APIs. Option E is less efficient because it uses Java UDF inside stored procedure.

NEW QUESTION # 21
A data analyst needs to enrich customer data in a Snowflake database with demographic information obtained from the Snowflake Marketplace. The purchased listing provides data as a secure view Which of the following SQL commands is the MOST efficient and secure way to create a new table in the data analyst's database that combines customer data with the demographic information from the Marketplace listing, while ensuring that only necessary columns from the Marketplace data are included?

- A. ☐
- B. ☐
- C. ☐
- D. ☐
- E. ☐

Answer: A

Explanation:
Option D is the most efficient and secure because: it creates a new table or replaces if one exists, it explicitly selects only the necessary columns (age, income) from the Marketplace view, preventing unnecessary data exposure. It also explicitly uses JOIN condition. A new table has to created instead of view for persistence and to prevent recomputing of the data on frequent requests.

NEW QUESTION # 22
Which action is crucial for identifying demographics and relationships during diagnostic analysis?
(Select all that apply)

- A. Ignoring statistical trends for focused analysis
- B. Examining demographic variations linked to anomalies
- C. Analyzing isolated anomalies without considering relationships
- D. Considering relationships among data variables

Answer: B,D

Explanation:
Analyzing demographic variations and considering relationships are crucial in identifying anomalies during diagnostic analysis.

NEW QUESTION # 23

How do materialized views differ from regular views in terms of data storage and computation?

- A. Materialized views simplify complex data structures for better computation.
- B. Materialized views restrict data storage for better computation.
- C. Regular views provide precomputed snapshots for improved query performance.
- D. Regular views provide precomputed snapshots, unlike materialized views.

Answer: D

Explanation:
Materialized views provide precomputed snapshots, differentiating them from regular views.

NEW QUESTION # 24
Which approach is most suitable for making data-driven predictions?

- A. Ignoring historical data trends
- B. Basic SQL queries
- C. Using built-in SQL functions for statistical analysis
- D. Relying on external data sources only

Answer: C
