AAVSB Veterinary Technician National Exam Sample Questions (Q610-Q615):

NEW QUESTION # 610

Which of the following will not help keep a technician safe when taking digital dental radiographs?

- A. Stand at a 90-degree angle perpendicular to the beam
- B. Stand at a 125-degree angle perpendicular to the beam

- C. Standing behind a barrier at a distance
- D. Stand at a 130-degree angle parallel to the beam

Answer: D

Explanation:

When taking digital dental radiographs, the technician should be behind a wall or similar barrier or standing anywhere from 90- to 130-degree angles perpendicular to the x-ray beam. This allows the tech to be away from the beam's direction and in the safe zone. Many hand-held units do have leaded shields to protect the operator, but many practices will have you wear a lead apron to be safe. Thus, while 130-degrees is correct, remember that you always want to stand perpendicular, not parallel to the beam. Always remember time, distance, and shielding. You want to be as far away as possible, exposed for as little as possible, and use proper shielding such as lead aprons or lead walls.

NEW QUESTION # 611

What is a laryngoscope?

- A. An instrument used to remove foreign objects from the respiratory tract
- B. A lighted instrument used to place endotracheal tubes
- C. A lighted instrument used to examine the lower respiratory tract
- D. A camera used to take diagnostic images of the lower respiratory tract

Answer: B

Explanation:

A laryngoscope is a lighted instrument used to place endotracheal tubes. They are available in a variety of sizes and lengths to reflect variations in oral cavity anatomy.

A bronchoscope is used to examine and manipulate structures of the lower airway.

NEW QUESTION # 612

You will be evaluating a cow and need to cast her. Regardless of the method of casting used, what is the first step required?

- A. Place a halter and secure the head
- B. Place ropes under the animal's brisket
- C. Create a noose around the neck
- D. Place a half hitch around the flank area

Answer: A

Explanation:

Casting is used to bring a cow to a recumbent position. It must be done carefully and gently, yet with enough force to get the animal to lie down. There are two casting methods, but regardless of which is chosen, you first want to place a halter on the animal and secure her head to something very sturdy, like a post.

Casting method 1:

Using a long rope ending with an eyelet (or using a bowline knot, creating the same thing), make a noose around the neck. This rope extends caudally where a half-hitch is placed about the girth and then another around the flank. Use caution with rope placement, ensuring to avoid the prepuce/udder. The remaining rope extends along the cow's back and is pulled caudally. Using strong force, the animal will usually lie down.

Casting method 2 - burley casting harness or crisscross method:

This method may be more beneficial by avoiding pressure on the prepuce, milk veins, and trachea. Instead of crossing the ropes with a half-hitch, the ropes are passed under the brisket and between the forelimbs. The ropes are then brought over the back with another crisscrossing step. Both rope ends are then taken between the animal's hind legs.

Once cast-regardless of method-unless the animal needs to be in lateral recumbency, make sure to help them sit sternally. This minimizes the risk of bloat and aspiration. You can use wedges or hay bales to help keep them upright.

NEW QUESTION # 613

The veterinary surgeon has asked you to place their patient in dorsal recumbency for an upcoming procedure. Which of the following have they requested?

- A. The veterinary surgeon has asked for the patient to lay on their abdomen with the back and neck exposed
- B. The veterinary surgeon has asked for the patient to lay on their right side
- C. The veterinary surgeon has asked for the patient to lay on their back with the abdomen and chest exposed
- D. The veterinary surgeon has asked for the patient to lay on their left side

Answer: C

Explanation:

The dorsal recumbent position calls for the patient to lay on their back. This position is ideal for surgical procedures that require access to the abdominal and thoracic cavities.

The right lateral recumbency position calls for the patient to lay on their side with the right side down. The left lateral recumbency position calls for the patient to lay on their side with the left side down. The prone position calls for the patient to lay on their abdomen with the back and neck exposed.

NEW QUESTION # 614

Which vein is the most common placement location for a central venous catheter?

- A. Right cephalic
- B. Jugular
- C. Left cephalic
- D. Auricular

Answer: B

Explanation:

Jugular veins are the most popular site for central venous access because they are easy to access and they have low complication rates. Saphenous veins are also sometimes used for central venous access as an alternative option in smaller animals.

Central venous catheters do not have the ability to feed into a central vein from entry points at the auricular, left cephalic, or right cephalic veins.
