NEW QUESTION # 111

United Telecom is moving its assets to Communications Cloud as part of its digital transformation. During the asset migration process, a Consultant includes a step to create a No change MACD order.

Why is it necessary to have this step in the migration process?

- A. To create Inventory Items to be used in subsequent MACD
- B. To validate if MACD works on migrated assets
- C. To validate if migrated asset data aligns with asset data model
- D. To validate if decomposition works on migrated assets

Answer: B

Explanation:

When assets are migrated into Communications Cloud, Salesforce best practices require performing a "No-Change MACD Order" after data loading. This process creates a technical MACD order that does not modify any service, but instead tests whether the MACD orchestration, decomposition, and asset-based ordering logic work correctly with the migrated asset records.

Salesforce documentation explains that migrated assets must be fully compatible with:

Order decomposition mappings

Technical product relationships

Association to Service Accounts, Billing Accounts, Premises

Child/parent asset hierarchies

Fulfillment Request Line generation

Change order processing (A → B transitions)

A no-change MACD validates that the migrated assets are structurally correct and "MACD-ready." If this test fails, the migration did not properly map assets to the Communications Cloud asset data model.

Options A and C overlap with validation but do not address MACD execution. Option B (Inventory Items) is not created through MACD and is unrelated.
