Cisco 300-620 Exam, also known as Implementing Cisco Application Centric Infrastructure, is a certification test for IT professionals who wish to validate their skills and knowledge in deploying and managing Cisco's Application Centric Infrastructure (ACI) solutions. ACI is an innovative software-defined networking (SDN) architecture that simplifies the management of data center networks and automates the delivery of applications and services.

Cisco's ACI infrastructure is a new generation of networking technology that focuses on the applications themselves, rather than the network that supports them. This infrastructure provides IT professionals with greater scalability, resiliency, and agility through automation, policy-based management, and centralized control of networking and data center resources. The DCACI exam covers all of these aspects of ACI and tests the knowledge and skills necessary to deploy and manage this infrastructure effectively.
