College Admission American Nurses Credentialing Center: Adult Psychiatric-Mental Health Nurse Practitioner-Board Certified Sample Questions (Q748-Q753):

NEW QUESTION # 748

In common psychiatric disorders, neurotransmitters are implicated in the complex pathophysiology of certain disease processes. Which neurotransmitter's general function most involves memory and sustained autonomic functions?

- A. Serotonin
- B. Norepinephrine
- C. Glutamate
- D. Dopamine

Answer: C

Explanation:

The general function of glutamate involves memory and sustained autonomic functions.

The general function of dopamine involves normal functioning of thinking, decision-making, reward-seeking behavior, fine muscle action, and integrated cognition.

The general function of norepinephrine involves alertness, orientation, fight-or-flight, learning, memory, and focus and attention.

These many involve autonomic functions but not in a sustained way.

The general function of serotonin involves the regulation of sleep, pain perception, mood states, temperature, aggression, and libido.

NEW QUESTION # 749

Which of the following is least likely to be a potential cause of homelessness?

- A. Poverty
- B. Lack of motivation
- C. Mental illness
- D. Inadequate public assistance

Answer: B

Explanation:

Homelessness is an enormous problem affecting people in the United States and around the world. Reasons for homelessness include the following:

- * Mental illness
- * Substance use disorders
- * Poverty
- * Unemployment
- * Inadequate public assistance
- * Domestic violence

NEW QUESTION # 750

Which of the following describes a leadership competency for nurse practitioners?

- A. Prescribing medications correctly and safely
- B. Using self-reflection to improve care
- C. Advocating for clients' medicolegal rights
- D. Providing psychoeducation

Answer: C

Explanation:

Advocating for clients' medicolegal rights is an example of a leadership competency for nurse practitioners, as it relates to their role of guiding and promoting change in healthcare.

Using self-reflection to improve care, prescribing medications correctly and safely, and providing psychoeducation all relate to independent practice competencies, not leadership competencies for nurse practitioners.

NEW QUESTION # 751

The psychiatric mental health nurse practitioner must determine the bipolar-ADHD boundary in a 10-year-old male child. Diagnosis can be difficult because there are symptoms that are similar to each and some that are different. One symptom more common to bipolar disorder but very rare with ADHD is:

- A. flight of ideas
- B. impulsivity
- C. inattention
- D. irritability

Answer: A

Explanation:

When diagnosing psychiatric conditions in children, particularly differentiating between Bipolar Disorder (BD) and Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD), healthcare professionals encounter specific challenges due to the overlap in symptomatology. Both disorders manifest in ways that can confuse diagnosis, but understanding the nuances and specific symptoms unique to each disorder can aid in accurate identification.

One symptom that is distinctly more common in bipolar disorder and not typical in ADHD is the "flight of ideas." Flight of ideas is a symptom characterized by rapid shifts in thoughts and speech patterns, where one might jump quickly from one idea to another. This can make a person's speech sound disjointed or incoherent, as connections between thoughts are often tangential or loosely associated. In the context of bipolar disorder, flight of ideas is most commonly observed during manic episodes, where increased energy and decreased need for sleep can also be noted.

In contrast, ADHD is characterized primarily by symptoms of inattention, impulsivity, and hyperactivity. Children with ADHD may show signs of being easily distracted, forgetful, fidgety, unable to stay seated, excessively active, or impulsive in actions and speech. However, the speech pattern in ADHD, while possibly rapid and interruptive, does not typically show the disjointed, rapidly shifting thought process seen in flight of ideas associated with bipolar disorder.

The distinction is crucial because while both disorders can exhibit impulsivity and irritability, the presence of flight of ideas is a strong indicator of bipolar disorder rather than ADHD. Understanding this can prevent misdiagnosis and ensure that children receive the most appropriate treatment for their specific condition. Misdiagnosis can lead to ineffective treatment plans that fail to address the root of the child's difficulties, potentially worsening their condition.

Therefore, when a mental health professional, such as a psychiatric mental health nurse practitioner, evaluates a child suspected of having either ADHD or bipolar disorder, careful consideration of the child's speech patterns and thought processes is essential. Proper assessment tools and clinical interviews tailored to identify the presence of flight of ideas can be instrumental in distinguishing between these two diagnoses and guiding effective treatment strategies.

NEW QUESTION # 752

A PMHNP is completing a history with a patient with suspected substance abuse issues. During the clinical interview, the PHMNP asks, "What is the longest period you have gone without using it?" Which of the five domains of a substance abuse interview does this type of question address?

- A. Social consequences
- B. Relational aspects
- C. Physical/psychological consequences
- D. Pattern of use

Answer: D

Explanation:

A clinical interview for substance abuse history has five domains: current level and history, the pattern of use, social consequences, relational aspects, and physical/psychological consequences. This question probes for additional information on the patient's current pattern of use.
