- A. The host OS in paravirtualization supports only open-source operating systems.
- B. Full virtualization does not modify the guest OS. Virtual machines are highly portable and compatible and support a wide range of operating systems.
- C. CPU virtualization includes full virtualization, paravirtualization, and hardware-assisted virtualization.
- D. Hardware-assisted virtualization does not require the CPUs to support it.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed Explanation (HCIA-Cloud Computing aligned):

CPU virtualization is a fundamental concept in HCIA-Cloud Computing and includes multiple implementation methods.

Option A is correct. CPU virtualization is commonly categorized into full virtualization, paravirtualization, and hardware-assisted virtualization.

Option B is correct. Full virtualization allows guest operating systems to run without modification, which ensures high compatibility and portability across different platforms.

Option C is correct in the HCIA context. Paravirtualization requires modifications to the guest OS kernel, which historically limited support primarily to open-source operating systems.

Option D is false. Hardware-assisted virtualization explicitly requires CPU support, such as Intel VT-x or AMD-V. Without these features, hardware-assisted virtualization cannot function.

Therefore, the false statement is D.
