CII Insurance Business and Finance (IBF) Sample Questions (Q69-Q74):

NEW QUESTION # 69

An item has been inserted in a company's balance sheet in respect of machinery. Under which heading will this normally appear?

- A. Current assets.
- B. Shareholder equity.

- C. Non-current assets.
- D. Technical provisions.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Machinery is a tangible asset with a useful economic life extending beyond a single accounting period. Under standard financial accounting principles, such assets are classified as Non-current assets (or fixed assets) on the balance sheet. They are held not for resale but for use in the production or supply of goods and services.

This contrasts with Current Assets, like cash or accounts receivable, which are expected to be realized in cash or sold within one year. Technical provisions are an insurer's major liability for claims, and shareholder equity is the residual interest in assets after deducting all liabilities. The purchase of machinery is a capital investment decision, recorded as an investing activity on the cash flow statement, as confirmed when the source notes an acquisition will appear "as a cash outflow from investment activities." Correctly classifying assets is fundamental to calculating key ratios like return on capital employed, linking this Financial Accounting Principle to Financial Performance Ratios.

NEW QUESTION # 70

Joe should advise the Board that the underwriting administration services information currently in use is most commonly known as a?

- A. Transaction Processing System
- B. Accounting Information System
- C. Codified Management System
- D. Management Information System

Answer: C

Explanation:

The specific term extracted from the source material for this context is a "Codified Management System." This refers to a system that uses codes to classify and record administrative transactions, which is typical in underwriting administration where risks, policy types, or administrative actions (like endorsements or cancellations) are numerically coded for efficient tracking and analysis. While a Management Information System (MIS) is a broader term for systems that produce reports for management decision-making, the direct reference from the learning material specifies a codified system as the tool for administering such services.

An Accounting Information System is focused on financial transactions and ledgers, and a Transaction Processing System is a generic term for real-time processing. In the specialist context of an insurer's administrative procedures, using a codified approach enables standardization and integration with the technical underwriting platform, directly relating to the efficiency discussed in Management Accounting and Budgeting. The external source explicitly confirms this terminology: Joe should "advise the Board that the underwriting administration services information currently in use is most commonly known as a Codified Management System."

NEW QUESTION # 71

What will the activities of an insurers finance director most likely include?

- A. The technical pricing of new and existing products.
- B. Preparation for reviews by rating agencies.
- C. Managing the internal audit plan.
- D. Supervising the actuarial function.

Answer: B

Explanation:

The finance director is the executive primarily responsible for the company's financial stewardship and external financial communication. A key part of this role is managing the relationship with financial strength rating agencies, which involves preparing detailed financial and strategic data for their analytical review. The rating directly impacts the insurer's ability to underwrite business, particularly in specialty and reinsurance markets where a high rating is a competitive necessity. Technical pricing is the chief actuary's domain.

Managing the internal audit plan is typically a joint responsibility of the audit committee and the chief internal auditor to preserve independence. While the finance director oversees the actuarial outputs for financial reporting, they do not supervise the independent actuarial function. This distinction of roles is a key governance point from the Insurance Company Environment topic, ensuring that the maker of technical prices is separate from those who report and market the financial results.

NEW QUESTION # 72

An insurer's Articles of Association must include

- A. the regulations for the running of the insurer's internal affairs.
- B. the audited financial statements.
- C. the premium rates for its top-selling products.
- D. the minutes of the last board meeting.

Answer: A

Explanation:

The Articles of Association are one of the two foundational constitutional documents for every company registered with Companies House (the other being the Memorandum/Certificate of Incorporation). Their legal purpose is to set out the regulations for the company's internal management and administration. This includes, for example, the rules for appointing directors, issuing shares, conducting general meetings, and the voting rights attached to different classes of shares. They are a binding contract between the company and its shareholders. The Articles do not contain operational documents like premium rates or board minutes, nor do they contain the year-end statutory financial reports. The source material explicitly states they "must include the regulations for the running of the insurer's internal affairs." This governance framework, explored in the Insurance Company Environment topic, is critical because any major strategic shift, such as a takeover plan needing shareholder agreement at a general meeting, must be executed in strict compliance with the procedures defined in these Articles.

NEW QUESTION # 73

Which financial document will the CEO use to obtain the solvency margin?

- A. Balance sheet.
- B. The management accounts.
- C. The income statement.
- D. The cash flow statement.

Answer: A

Explanation:

The solvency margin represents the surplus of an insurer's assets over its liabilities, representing the capital buffer available to absorb unexpected shocks. This figure is derived directly from the Balance sheet, which records the company's net financial position at a specific point in time. As confirmed by the source, "from which financial document will he obtain the solvency margin? Balance sheet." The income statement shows profitability (flow) but not the complete stock of assets and liabilities. The cash flow statement shows liquidity. Management accounts may contain an internal solvency calculation, but the definitive, audited solvency margin for statutory and rating agency purposes is a balance sheet construct. This is a core concept in the Capital Management and Solvency topic, where the balance sheet's role as the primary source for assessing the "surplus regulatory capital divided by regulatory capital available" (the solvency coverage ratio) is critical for both internal management and the requirements of Solvency II's capital adequacy rules.
