SailPoint Certified IdentityIQ Associate Exam Sample Questions (Q67-Q72):

NEW QUESTION # 67

Is this displayed in the Identity Warehouse?

List of objects the user owns

- A. No
- B. Yes

Answer: B

Explanation:

Yes. The Identity Warehouse in SailPoint IdentityIQ is used to display identity-centered information from the IdentityCube and related IdentityIQ object relationships. In addition to core identity attributes, accounts, roles, entitlements, manager relationships, and direct reports, IdentityIQ can show objects for which the identity is designated as the owner. Ownership is an important governance concept because owners may be responsible for approving access, maintaining roles, reviewing entitlements, managing applications, or participating in certification and remediation processes.

An object owner in IdentityIQ may be associated with configurable objects such as roles, applications, managed attributes, policies, or other governance-related items. Displaying owned objects from the identity view helps administrators and governance users understand the responsibilities assigned to that identity, not just the access held by the identity. This distinction matters because IdentityIQ models both "what access the identity has" and "what governance responsibilities the identity owns." Therefore, a list of objects the user owns is appropriately displayed in the Identity Warehouse when ownership relationships exist and the viewer has sufficient permission. Reference topics: Identity Modeling, IdentityCube contents, Identity Warehouse, object ownership, manager relationships, and governance responsibility modeling.

NEW QUESTION # 68

The purpose of marking an attribute as managed when defining the application account schema is to designate it as:

An attribute with values that are promoted to the Entitlement Catalog.

- A. No
- B. Yes

Answer: B

Explanation:

Yes. In SailPoint IdentityIQ, marking an application account schema attribute as managed designates that the values discovered for that attribute are treated as managed entitlement values and promoted into the Entitlement Catalog. This is typically used for attributes that represent access, such as groups, roles, permissions, profiles, or other application-specific entitlement assignments. During aggregation, IdentityIQ reads account data from the application. When a schema attribute is marked as managed, the distinct values of that attribute can become ManagedAttribute objects, allowing IdentityIQ to govern them as cataloged access items. This catalog promotion is important because raw technical values often need business context before they can be reviewed, requested, approved, certified, or reported on. The Entitlement Catalog can store metadata such as display name, description, owner, requestability, classification, and other governance attributes. These values then become usable in access certifications, access requests, reports, policy evaluation, and role modeling.

Therefore, the statement accurately describes the managed attribute function. Reference topics: Applications

- account schema attribute properties; Access Modeling - entitlement catalog; Governance - certification content and entitlement review.

NEW QUESTION # 69

Is this statement true for the identity refresh task?

It will execute the aggregation rules set on the application definition.

- A. No
- B. Yes

Answer: A

Explanation:

The statement is false. The Identity Refresh task does not execute aggregation rules configured on an application definition. Aggregation rules are part of the application aggregation process, where IdentityIQ connects to a source system, reads account or group data, applies connector and application-level processing, and stores account links, entitlement values, and related data in the IdentityIQ repository.

The Identity Refresh task operates after data is already present in IdentityIQ. Its function is to update IdentityCubes and recalculate identity-level governance information. Depending on selected options, Identity Refresh may update identity attributes, refresh role assignments, detect assigned or detected roles, evaluate policies, process lifecycle events, refresh manager relationships, or recalculate risk and access-related identity state.

Application aggregation and identity refresh are separate task functions. Aggregation obtains and normalizes data from applications; Identity Refresh interprets and recalculates identity governance state using that aggregated data. Therefore, rules tied specifically to aggregation on the application definition are executed during aggregation, not during Identity Refresh.

Reference topics: Identity Modeling - Identity Refresh task options; Applications - aggregation rules and application definitions; Foundational Concepts - tasks and workflows.

NEW QUESTION # 70

Is this statement accurate about the BeanShell rules used in the aggregation process?

The application's creation rule, if specified, will run when IdentityIQ is unable to correlate an account to an existing identity.

- A. No
- B. Yes

Answer: B

Explanation:

Yes. In SailPoint IdentityIQ aggregation, correlation is attempted first to match an aggregated account to an existing IdentityCube. Correlation may use configured attribute mappings, correlation rules, or other application correlation logic. If IdentityIQ cannot correlate the account to an existing identity, the application's creation rule, when configured, can be invoked to determine how IdentityIQ should handle identity creation for that uncorrelated account.

This is especially relevant for authoritative applications, where aggregated account records may represent people who should exist as identities in IdentityIQ. The creation rule can control identity creation behavior, populate required identity attributes, and apply implementation-specific logic when standard correlation does not find a match. Without appropriate creation behavior, the account may remain uncorrelated and require later remediation through corrected correlation logic, re-aggregation, or manual correlation.

Therefore, the statement is accurate: the creation rule is associated with the aggregation and correlation process and is used when an account cannot be matched to an existing IdentityCube. Reference topics:

Applications, BeanShell rules, account aggregation, correlation logic, identity creation rules, authoritative applications, and uncorrelated account handling.

NEW QUESTION # 71

Is this action an example of provisioning?

Reviewing an identity's access during a certification campaign

- A. No
- B. Yes

Answer: A

Explanation:

No. Reviewing an identity's access during a certification campaign is not provisioning. In SailPoint IdentityIQ, certification campaigns are part of governance and access review functionality. Their purpose is to allow designated reviewers, such as managers, application owners, role owners, or other certifiers, to examine existing access and decide whether it should be approved, revoked, delegated, or otherwise acted upon.

Provisioning is different. Provisioning refers to the fulfillment of access changes, such as creating accounts, modifying account attributes, adding or removing entitlements, disabling accounts, deleting accounts, or executing manual fulfillment work items when direct connector-based provisioning is unavailable. A certification decision may later trigger provisioning if a reviewer revokes access and IdentityIQ generates a remediation or deprovisioning action. However, the review activity itself is governance, not provisioning. Therefore, "reviewing an identity's access during a certification campaign" is an access review action, not a provisioning action.

Reference topics: Governance, certifications, access reviews, remediation, revocation decisions, Provisioning, provisioning plans, and deprovisioning fulfillment.
