VMware Advanced VMware Cloud Foundation 9.0 vSphere Kubernetes Service Sample Questions (Q85-Q90):

NEW QUESTION # 85

Which statement accurately describes the function of the vSphere Plugin for kubectl (also known as vsphere-plugin) when authenticating to a vSphere with Tanzu environment?

- A. It is a server-side component installed on the Supervisor Control Plane that translates Kubernetes API calls into vSphere API calls.
- B. It is a client-side helper that integrates with vCenter Single Sign-On (SSO) to generate a valid kubeconfig file and authentication token for accessing the Supervisor Cluster and TKG clusters.
- C. It acts as a proxy that tunnels all kubectl commands directly to the ESXi hosts bypassing the Supervisor Control Plane.
- D. It is used solely for deploying vSphere Pods and cannot be used to interact with Tanzu Kubernetes Grid (TKG) clusters.

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION # 86

An administrator is deploying vSphere Kubernetes Service (VKS) to support containerized workloads across multiple regions. Each region hosts a dedicated Workload Domain with Supervisor instances deployed on vSphere Distributed Switch (VDS) networking. The organization's security policy requires that pod-to-pod and pod-to-service communications be fully observable and controllable at the Kubernetes layer, without introducing additional licensing or overlay complexity.

When deploying a Supervisor, which CNI should the administrator select as the default supported option?

- A. Cilium
- B. Antrea
- C. Flannel
- D. Calico

Answer: B

Explanation:

VCF 9.0 explicitly documents that VKS supports two CNI options: Antrea and Calico, and that the system-defined default CNI is Antrea. This directly eliminates Flannel and Cilium as default supported options for VKS clusters on Supervisor in this context. VCF 9.0 also describes how a vSphere administrator can view or change this setting in the vSphere Client under Supervisor Management # Configure # Kubernetes Service # Default CNI, further reinforcing that Antrea is the baseline/default choice.

From a policy perspective in the question, the requirement is Kubernetes-layer observability and control of pod communications "without additional licensing or overlay complexity." Antrea is presented in VCF 9.0 as the default CNI and is implemented using Open vSwitch, with networking and network policy capabilities provided at the Kubernetes layer for pods and services. Because it is the documented default (and supported) option for new VKS clusters, selecting Antrea best aligns with the "default supported option" requirement.

NEW QUESTION # 87

A VI Administrator wants to install the Velero Supervisor Service.

The administrator has downloaded the velero-service.yaml (Service Definition) from the VMware Marketplace.

What is the first step to make this service available for installation on a Supervisor Cluster?

- A. Upload the Service Definition to vCenter Server via Workload Management > Services > Manage > Add New Service. This registers the service version globally in vCenter.
- B. Create a vSphere Namespace named velero.
- C. Run kubectl apply -f velero-service.yaml on the Supervisor.
- D. Install the Velero plugin on the vCenter Appliance.

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 88

What are three benefits of VMware vSphere Kubernetes Service (VKS)? (Choose three.)

- A. Leverages open-source technologies.
- B. Simplifies Kubernetes management and operations.
- C. Manages any Kubernetes distribution.
- D. Enables pods to run directly on ESXi.
- E. Provides consistent Kubernetes deployment on vSphere.

Answer: A,B,E

Explanation:

VCF 9.0 defines VKS as an upstream Kubernetes offering that is built for vSphere and delivered with "well-thought-out defaults" to reduce operational burden. It states VKS provides an "opinionated installation of Kubernetes" with defaults "optimized for vSphere," which "reduce[s] the amount of time and effort" typically spent deploying and running an enterprise Kubernetes cluster—this directly supports simplified management and operations (A).

VCF 9.0 also emphasizes VKS is "integrated with the vSphere infrastructure" (storage, networking, authentication) and is built on a Supervisor that maps to vSphere clusters, creating a "unified product experience." This supports consistent Kubernetes deployment on vSphere (B) because clusters are provisioned and operated in a standardized, vSphere-native way.

Finally, VCF 9.0 states VKS clusters "use open source Linux-based" components from VMware by Broadcom and notes key integrations (for example, CNI options) are open source—supporting leveraging open-source technologies (D).

Options C and E are not VKS benefits as stated: VKS targets VKS-provisioned upstream Kubernetes clusters (not "any distribution"), and "pods directly on ESXi" is described as vSphere Pods (Workload Management), not a defining benefit of VKS clusters.

NEW QUESTION # 89

A Cloud Administrator is designing a vSphere with Tanzu environment on a VDS-based cluster. The requirements specify that the environment must support frontend network isolation, where the Supervisor Control Plane traffic and the Workload Cluster traffic reside on different VLANs.

Review the following HAProxy topology configuration options:

1. Default (Basic) Topology: All NICs on a single management network.
2. Frontend Network Topology: Separates Management and Workload interfaces.

Which configuration steps correctly implement the Frontend Network Topology for HAProxy?

- A. Deploy two separate HAProxy appliances, one for the Supervisor and one for the Workload Clusters.
- B. Deploy the HAProxy VM with two virtual network adapters (vNICs); connect the first to the Management Port Group and the second to the Workload/Frontend Port Group, then configure the Workload Management wizard to map the IP ranges accordingly.
- C. Configure NSX-T to manage the VDS port groups.
- D. Deploy HAProxy with a single interface and use VLAN tagging inside the Guest OS to separate traffic.

Answer: B
