NEW QUESTION # 106

A bank uses customer departmentalization to categorize its departments. Which of the following groups best exemplifies this method of categorization?

- A. South, southwest and east.
- B. Community, institutional, and agricultural banking
- C. Mortgages, credit cards, and savings.
- D. Teller, manager, and IT specialist

Answer: B

Explanation:

Customer Departmentalization: This method categorizes departments based on the type of customers they serve. It aligns services and strategies with the specific needs and characteristics of different customer groups.

Examples of Customer Departmentalization:

- * Community Banking: Focuses on services tailored for local communities, often involving personal banking services.
- * Institutional Banking: Caters to large organizations, offering specialized financial products and services.
- * Agricultural Banking: Provides financial services to farmers and agricultural businesses, addressing their unique needs.

Comparison with Other Options:

- * Product Departmentalization: Option B categorizes by products offered, such as mortgages and credit cards.
- * Geographical Departmentalization: Option C categorizes by regions, such as south and southwest.
- * Functional Departmentalization: Option D categorizes by job functions, such as teller and manager.

References:

- * Customer departmentalization is exemplified by categorizing banking services into community, institutional, and agricultural sectors, focusing on the distinct needs of different customer groups.

NEW QUESTION # 107

According to the IIA Code of Ethics, which of the following is required with regard to communicating results?

- B. The internal auditor should reveal material facts that could potentially distort the reporting of activities under review
- C. The internal auditor should obtain all material information within the established time and budget parameters.
- D. The internal auditor should disclose all material information obtained by the date of the final engagement communication.

Answer: B

Explanation:

The IIA Code of Ethics sets forth principles and expectations for ethical behavior in internal auditing, particularly regarding the communication of results.

- * Integrity and Transparency: According to the IIA Code of Ethics, internal auditors are expected to exhibit integrity and transparency in their reporting, ensuring that material facts are disclosed accurately to avoid misrepresentation.

NEW QUESTION # 108

An internal auditor is evaluating an organization's risk management framework.

Which of the following would provide the STRONGEST evidence that risk management is effective?

- A. Management performs annual risk assessments.
- B. Risk registers are documented and approved.
- C. Risk responses are aligned with organizational objectives and monitored.
- D. Risk policies have been communicated to employees.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Effective risk management requires more than documentation. Risks must be actively managed through appropriate responses and ongoing monitoring aligned with objectives.

NEW QUESTION # 109

Which of the following situations is most likely to heighten an internal auditors professional skepticism regarding potential fraud?

- A. A salesperson frequently complains about the organization's policy on sales commissions.
- B. The accounts payable supervisor has requested advances against her monthly salary on several occasions
- C. A financial accountant is absent from work frequently due to regular medical procedures
- D. A procurement manager does not have the expected academic credentials for his position

Answer: D

Explanation:

Professional skepticism is an essential attitude for internal auditors, particularly when assessing the risk of fraud. According to the IIA's Practice Guide "Internal Auditing and Fraud", one of the red flags that may heighten an internal auditor's professional skepticism is the presence of employees whose qualifications or credentials do not match the requirements of their positions. In this case, a procurement manager lacking the expected academic credentials raises concerns because it could indicate potential fraudulent activities such as unqualified decision-making or manipulation of procurement processes.

NEW QUESTION # 110

Which of the following is most likely the subject of a periodic report from the chief audit executive to the board?

- B. A complete, accurate, and comprehensive account of engagement observations and recommendations.
- C. The internal audit activity's purpose, authority, responsibility, and performance relative to plan.
- D. Oversight of the coordination between the internal audit activity and independent outside auditors

Answer: C

Explanation:

Introduction:

The chief audit executive (CAE) has a crucial role in reporting to the board on various aspects of the internal audit activity (IAA).

Importance of Reporting:

Periodic reports from the CAE to the board are essential for ensuring transparency and providing oversight on the IAA's performance and alignment with organizational objectives.
