PMI PMP Certification Exam is a computer-based exam that consists of 180 multiple-choice questions. Candidates have four hours to complete the exam. The questions are designed to test the candidate's knowledge and understanding of project management concepts, as well as their ability to apply them in real-world scenarios. The passing score for the exam is 61%.

The PMP exam is currently undergoing a major update, with the new version set to be released in January 2023. The updated exam reflects changes in the project management industry, including new practices, tools, and technologies. The new exam will test candidates on three domains: people, process, and business environment. The people domain focuses on the skills and competencies needed to lead and manage teams, while the process domain covers project management practices and techniques. The business environment domain includes topics such as organizational strategy, governance, and compliance.

NEW QUESTION # 1131

An experienced project manager is leading an enthusiastic team but realizes the team lacks the experience to complete the job successfully. What should the project manager do to reduce the risk of project failure?

- A. Ask the sponsor to add experienced professionals to the team.
- B. Approve the appropriate training program for team members.
- C. Provide team members with the necessary coaching and mentoring.
- D. Assign a dedicated resource to check the quality of each deliverable.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Explanation

According to the PMBOK Guide, the project manager should develop the project team by improving the competencies, interaction, and environment of the team members. The project manager should also use various methods and techniques to enhance the team performance and satisfaction, such as coaching, mentoring, training, feedback, recognition, and rewards. In this scenario, the project manager is leading an enthusiastic team but realizes the team lacks the experience to complete the job successfully. This is a human resource risk that may affect the quality and delivery of the project. The best course of action is to provide team members with the necessary coaching and mentoring to help them acquire the skills and knowledge needed for the project, and to guide them through the challenges and issues that may arise. Providing team members with the necessary coaching and mentoring (option C) is the best solution to the issue, as it demonstrates proactive and effective project human resource management. Asking the sponsor to add experienced professionals to the team (option A) may not be feasible or desirable, as it may incur additional costs and time to onboard and integrate the new resources, and may disrupt the existing team dynamics and morale. Approving the appropriate training program for team members (option B) may also be helpful, but it is not the only or most comprehensive approach. Training is a formal and structured way of imparting knowledge and skills to the team members, but it may not address the specific needs and issues of the project or the team. Coaching and mentoring are more personalized and interactive ways of developing the team members, as they involve providing advice, feedback, support, and encouragement to the team members throughout the project. Assigning a dedicated resource to check the quality of each deliverable (option D) may also be ineffective or inefficient, as it may create a bottleneck and dependency on the resource, and may undermine the trust and responsibility of the team members. The project manager should empower the team members to perform quality assurance and control activities, and to ensure that the deliverables meet the quality standards and expectations of the project. NEW QUESTION # 1132

A project manager is leading a cross-organizational project that is replacing a platform on which various solutions used by 15 business units were built. The project is part of a large program of work, and some of the resources are shared with other projects outside of the program initiated by the respective business units.

Which stakeholders should the project manager consult with first to manage interdependencies?

- A. Business unit managers
- B. Project sponsors
- C. Other project managers
- D. Program managers

Answer: D

Explanation:

Managing interdependencies in a cross-organizational project, especially one that affects multiple business units and shares resources with other projects, requires a coordinated approach. The PMBOK Guide highlights the importance of identifying and engaging stakeholders who can influence the project's outcomes¹. In this scenario, program managers are typically responsible for overseeing the program's overall direction and managing dependencies across projects within the program². Consulting with program managers first can provide a comprehensive view of the program's objectives, resources, and constraints, which is crucial for effectively managing interdependencies. NEW QUESTION # 1133

A marketing campaign is being built to support a new product at a utility company. The company doesn't have data on what volume to expect from the marketing campaign and the associated advertising. This data is important because it will help drive the number of employees needed in the department so customers' needs can be met. The Project Manager remembers that a similar project was by a company his company acquired. He begins to review data from this project. This is a best example of what?

- A. Constraints
- B. Lessons learned
- C. Assumptions
- D. Historical information

Answer: D
