ASET Ethics Examination-ASET Professional Practice Exam (PPE) Sample Questions (Q39-Q44):

NEW QUESTION # 39

One regulated member confides to another regulated member that he misrepresented himself on his resume to his present employer. In that resume, he asserted that he had been employed overseas for the last 12 months, when in fact he was unemployed. Which of the following statements best describes what, if anything, the other regulated member should do with this information?

- A. Talk to the member directly and encourage the member to be honest with the employer.
- B. Encourage the member to be honest with the employer and, if the member does not comply, report the member to the employer.
- C. Encourage the member to be honest with the employer and, if the member does not comply, report the member to ASET.
- D. Ignore the information as any action could hurt the reputation of the member.

Answer: C

Explanation:

The ASET Code of Ethics requires members to report hazardous, illegal, or unethical professional decisions or practices. Misrepresenting one's qualifications or employment history on a resume is a severe breach of professional integrity and constitutes unethical conduct, as it deceives the employer and potentially puts the public at risk if the individual lacks the required experience for a technical role. However, ethical guidelines generally encourage allowing the offending party the opportunity to correct their mistake first. The observing member should confront the colleague, explaining the ethical violation and strongly encouraging them to confess the misrepresentation to their employer. If the colleague refuses to take responsibility and correct the deception, the observing member has a paramount duty to protect the integrity of the profession. In this scenario, the correct escalation path is to report the unethical conduct to the professional regulatory body, ASET, rather than directly interfering with the employer. ASET has the legal authority and disciplinary mandate to investigate and penalize members for unethical behavior.

NEW QUESTION # 40

Every province and territory in Canada has an Act that regulates engineering. Which of the following clauses will typically be found in every province's Act?

- A. To create compensation levels
- B. To protect the environment
- C. To create equipment guidelines
- D. To protect the public

Answer: D

Explanation:

The primary mandate of any professional regulatory organization (PRO) in Canada, such as ASET (Association of Science and Engineering Technology Professionals of Alberta) or APEGA, is the protection of the public. This principle is enshrined in the provincial Acts, such as the Engineering and Geoscience Professions Act (EGPA) in Alberta. The legislation grants self-regulatory powers to these professional bodies not to protect the financial interests, compensation levels, or job security of the members, but exclusively to ensure that the public is protected from incompetent or unethical practice.

By regulating who can enter the profession, maintaining strict standards of educational and experiential practice, enforcing a Code of Ethics, and administering a disciplinary process for those who fail to meet these standards, the Act ensures that engineering technologists and professionals hold public safety and welfare paramount. Therefore, clauses explicitly stating the mandate to protect the public and ensure public welfare are foundational and universally present in all provincial and territorial acts regulating engineering and applied science technology across Canada.

NEW QUESTION # 41

A regulated member of ASET employed by a computer manufacturer designs some computer equipment and signs off on the drawings. Although the design has been properly prepared, the manufacturing process is faulty, which increases the cost. The manufacturing division suggests modifications to the design to reduce costs, but the member finds that they would reduce the reliability of the product and would likely cost the company more through warranty claims. The regulated member's supervisor asks the member to sign off on the changes anyway. Which of the following should the member do?

- A. Raise the reliability concerns to the supervisor.
- B. Report the issue to ASET.
- C. Sign off on the changes.
- D. Go to various media outlets to expose the company.

Answer: A

Explanation:

This scenario presents an ethical dilemma involving the duty to an employer's long-term interests versus short-term manufacturing pressures. The ASET Code of Ethics requires members to "present clearly to employers and clients the possible consequences if professional decisions or judgments are overruled or disregarded." In this case, the proposed design changes do not necessarily threaten public health or safety (which would mandate a strict refusal); rather, they threaten product reliability and the company's long-term financial health via warranty claims. Signing off immediately (Option A) without outlining these risks is a failure of the professional's advisory duty. However, escalating to ASET (Option B) or the media (Option D) is vastly disproportionate and unprofessional, as no safety laws are being broken. The correct, ethical step is to act as a competent advisor: raise the reliability concerns directly to the supervisor, explicitly outlining the negative financial and reputational consequences of the cost-cutting measure. If the employer still chooses to proceed after being fully informed, the member has fulfilled their ethical duty regarding corporate business decisions.

NEW QUESTION # 42

A regulated member may apply for an exemption from the Continuing Professional Development program. For what length of time is the exemption effective?

- A. 3 years
- B. 2 years
- C. 1 year
- D. 6 months

Answer: C

Explanation:

Continuing Professional Development (CPD) is a mandatory component of maintaining professional competency and public trust as an ASET regulated member. However, ASET's regulatory framework recognizes that members may face extraordinary circumstances—such as severe illness, extended parental leave, or prolonged unemployment—that legitimately prevent them from fulfilling their annual CPD obligations. In such cases, members can formally apply for an exemption rather than resigning or facing administrative suspension. According to ASET's CPD guidelines, when a member applies for and is granted a CPD exemption, this exemption is strictly effective for a period of 1 year.

The one-year limit ensures that the member's status is reviewed regularly. If the extenuating circumstances persist beyond that year, the member must proactively reapply and provide updated documentation to justify extending the exemption for another year. This administrative process balances empathy for the member's personal situation with the association's legal mandate to continuously monitor and ensure the active competency of its professional roster.

NEW QUESTION # 43

Who has the authority to enact legislation?

- A. Federal government
- B. B and C above
- C. Provincial government
- D. Municipal government

Answer: B

Explanation:

In Canada's legal and political system, the authority to enact "legislation" (formal statutes or Acts) is strictly divided by the Canadian Constitution (specifically the Constitution Act, 1867) between two levels of government: the Federal government and the Provincial governments. The Federal government enacts legislation pertaining to matters of national interest (e.g., criminal law, telecommunications, national defense, copyright). The Provincial governments enact legislation pertaining to matters of regional interest (e.g., property and civil rights, healthcare, education, and the regulation of professions like engineering through Acts such as the EGPA). Municipal governments (cities, towns) do not have the constitutional authority to enact legislation. Instead, they are entirely "creatures of the province" and only possess delegated authority to pass "bylaws" (e.g., zoning rules, parking regulations, local building permits) under the strict boundaries set by provincial statutes. Therefore, only the provincial and federal levels of government possess the true constitutional power to enact legislation.
