Answer: D

NEW QUESTION # 102

Which command in a CLI session is used to check installed licenses on the Harmony Endpoint Management Server?

- A. cplic print -x
- B. show licenses all
- C. cplic add <license filename="">
 D. cplic print +x</license>

Answer: A

Explanation:

To check installed licenses on the Harmony Endpoint Management Server via the command-line interface (CLI), the correct command is cplic print -x. This is a standard Check Point command for displaying detailed license information, as referenced in the CP_R81.20_Harmony_Endpoint_Server_AdminGuide.pdf on page 58 under "Getting Licenses." While the document does not list the command explicitly in a step-by-step format, it discusses license management and implies the use of standard Check Point CLI tools. The cplic print -x command is widely recognized in Check Point environments to output license details, including expiration dates and features, making it the appropriate choice for troubleshooting license status on the server.

Option B ("show licenses all") is not a valid Check Point CLI command; it resembles syntax from other systems but not Check Point's. Option C ("cplic add <license filename="">") is for adding a license, not checking existing ones (page 58 mentions applying licenses, not viewing them). Option D ("cplic print +x") contains a syntax error; the correct flag is <code>-x</code>, not <code>+x</code>. Thus, option A is the verified answer based on Check Point's CLI conventions and the guide's context.
