- A. From SAP Business Network for Logistics
- B. From the container unit user interface
- C. From the freight booking user interface
- D. From report /SCMTMS/PLN_OPT

Answer: A,D

Explanation:

* From report /SCMTMS/PLN_OPT (A)allows users to trigger carrier selection as part of the transportation planning process, typically used for automated or manual planning.
* From SAP Business Network for Logistics (C)enables carrier selection through tendering processes, where carriers are invited to bid on freight orders.
The other options are incorrect:
* Freight booking user interface (B)is used for managing bookings (e.g., ocean or air transport) but is not typically used to initiate carrier selection, which is more aligned with freight orders.

According to the SAP documentation, theFreight Unit Building (A)validity area is used to define incompatibilities that prevent specific products from being combined into the same freight unit during the freight unit creation process. This ensures that incompatible products are separated into different freight units from the outset, avoiding issues during planning or execution.
The other options are incorrect:
* Automatic and Manual Planning (B)is used for incompatibilities during planning (e.g., vehicle or route restrictions), not product combination.
* Carrier Selection (C)applies to carrier-related restrictions, not product incompatibilities.
* Delivery Proposal (D)is used for delivery-level restrictions but is less relevant than freight unit building for product-specific incompatibilities.
