ASET Ethics Examination-ASET Professional Practice Exam (PPE) Sample Questions (Q91-Q96):

NEW QUESTION # 91

A regulated member of ASET is the manager in charge of the design and construction of a new chemical processing unit. During the course of work, the member suggests to the project contractor an alteration to the design that considerably improves safety. After the suggestion has been successfully implemented, the member is offered an expensive bottle of whiskey. Which of the following actions should the member take in this situation?

- A. Reject the gift from the project contractor.
- B. Accept the gift from the project contractor.
- C. Confirm with the member's employer whether the gift can be accepted.
- D. Report the project contractor to ASET.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Under the ASET Code of Ethics, regulated members must avoid conflicts of interest and maintain their professional independence and integrity. Accepting gifts, especially items of significant value like an expensive bottle of alcohol from a contractor, creates a strong perception of bias or favoritism, even if the gift is offered after a successful safety suggestion has already been implemented. This situation falls under the ethical obligation to act with integrity and avoid situations that could compromise, or appear to compromise, the member's professional judgment. If the manager accepts the gift, it might create an unspoken psychological obligation to favor that contractor in future bids or project decisions, which would be unethical and potentially detrimental to the employer or the public interest. While corporate gift policies vary, the safest and most ethically sound course of action for a professional technologist is to politely reject the gift, explaining that professional ethical guidelines prohibit the acceptance of personal rewards from contractors or vendors. This preserves professional boundaries and ensures objective decision-making.

NEW QUESTION # 92

Which of the following statements defines "continuing professional development"?

- A. Maintaining competence through ongoing skill and knowledge development
- B. Taking courses regularly to maintain technical proficiency
- C. Working towards a promotion at the place of employment
- D. Mentoring younger or new colleagues in the workplace

Answer: A

Explanation:

Continuing Professional Development (CPD) is a mandatory, statutory requirement for all ASET regulated members, fundamentally tied to the mandate of protecting the public. The most accurate, encompassing definition of CPD is the systematic maintenance, improvement, and broadening of knowledge and skills throughout a professional's career. Therefore, "Maintaining competence through ongoing skill and knowledge development" (Option D) is the correct definition. While taking formal courses (Option B) and mentoring younger colleagues (Option A) are excellent, specific examples of activities that qualify for CPD credits, they do not define the entire program, as CPD is highly flexible and includes self-directed study, attending conferences, and active professional practice. The ultimate goal of CPD is not to secure a promotion (Option C) or purely academic achievement, but to ensure that the technologist remains fully competent to practice safely in an ever-evolving technological landscape, thereby protecting the public from obsolete and unsafe engineering practices.

NEW QUESTION # 93

A consultant recommends that a client purchase goods from a company from which the consultant is paid a secret commission. This would be considered which of the following?

- A. A breach of contract
- B. A conflict of interest
- C. A breach of trade secrets
- D. A buyer beware situation

Answer: B

Explanation:

The ASET Code of Ethics unequivocally requires members to act with integrity towards clients and employers and to actively avoid conflicts of interest. A conflict of interest exists when a professional has a personal or financial interest that could inappropriately influence their objective professional judgment. Receiving a "secret commission" or "kickback" from a supplier while advising a client to purchase from that supplier is a textbook and severe conflict of interest. The client trusts the engineering technologist to provide unbiased, optimal technical advice based solely on the client's needs and project specifications. By accepting a secret commission, the consultant is financially incentivized to recommend a product that benefits their own wallet, rather than what might be best or most cost-effective for the client. This deeply violates the professional trust placed in the technologist. To resolve such an issue ethically, any existing financial relationships must be fully disclosed to the client upfront, before any recommendations are made.

NEW QUESTION # 94

In general, torts must be intentional or negligent to result in liability. In which of the following situations can the defendant be considered liable?

- A. An individual's reputation was damaged due to a wrong decision.
- B. A poor building design caused injury years after it was built.
- C. Someone was injured after the defendant told them not to enter the building.
- D. A fall outside a building that resulted in a broken leg was considered accidental.

Answer: B

Explanation:

In tort law, a professional can be held liable for "negligence" if they owed a duty of care, breached that duty by failing to meet the standard of a reasonable professional, and caused damage as a direct result.

A classic example of professional negligence is a "poor building design" (such as a structural flaw or failure to meet code). Crucially, the liability for this negligence does not disappear the moment the building is completed. Under the concept of latent defects and depending on provincial ultimate limitation periods (often 10 to 15 years), a professional can be held civilly liable if their poor design causes injury or catastrophic failure many years after the construction was finished. Options C and D involve situations where the defendant likely fulfilled their duty of care (by issuing a warning) or where the event was a pure accident lacking negligent intent. Therefore, the ongoing liability for a dangerous design flaw is the clearest example of tort liability.

NEW QUESTION # 95

A regulated member designs products that are sold to another firm. That firm used a particular product in a project and it caused a workplace accident resulting in injuries. Who can the firm sue for damages?

- A. No one, as the firm accepted the risks associated with the product
- B. The association who certified the regulated member
- C. The company that sold the product and/or the regulated member
- D. The firm's own employee for potentially misusing the product

Answer: C

Explanation:

In the realm of professional liability and tort law, professionals are held personally accountable for their negligence, regardless of their corporate affiliation. When a regulated member (like a C.E.T. or P.

Tech.) designs a product that subsequently fails and causes injury due to a design flaw, the injured party (the purchasing firm) can seek legal damages through a civil lawsuit. Under the legal principle of "joint and several liability," the plaintiff can sue the manufacturing company (the member's employer) under the doctrine of "vicarious liability," as the company profits from and is responsible for the products it sells. Simultaneously, the plaintiff can sue the individual regulated member who actually designed the product and applied their professional stamp/seal, as that professional owed a direct "duty of care" to the end-user. The regulatory association (ASET) is not liable for the individual actions of its members (Option A). Therefore, both the selling company and the individual professional are exposed to legal action.
