NEW QUESTION # 27

A financial institution needs to ingest sensitive customer data, including credit card transactions, while ensuring real-time updates to customer profiles.

What considerations should they prioritize?

- A. Rely solely on batch ingestion workflows.
- B. Avoid using streaming connectors for sensitive data.
- C. Enable Edge ingestion with encryption for sensitive data.
- D. Disable real-time updates to ensure data consistency.

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 28

What is the maximum number of identities that the graph viewer can display?

- A. 0
- B. 1
- C. 2
- D. 3

Answer: A

Explanation:

The Graph Viewer is a diagnostic tool within the Adobe Experience Platform UI that allows data architects to visualize how different identities (e.g., CRM IDs, Email, ECIDs) are stitched together for a specific individual. While an Identity Graph for a single person can technically contain a large number of nodes through co-occurrence and cross-device linking, the UI visualization has a hard limit for performance and readability.

The Graph Viewer is designed to display a maximum of 50 identities (nodes) at one time. If an identity graph exceeds this limit, the viewer will notify the user that the graph is too large to display in its entirety. This limit is in place to ensure that the browser-based visualization remains responsive and that the architectural relationships remain decipherable to the human eye.

It is important to distinguish this UI display limit from the system's processing limits. The Identity Service can maintain and resolve graphs much larger than 50 identities, though extremely large graphs (often called "leafy graphs") can trigger system protections to prevent incorrect stitching of unrelated individuals (e.g., shared computers). Option B (100) and Option C (4000) are significantly higher than the actual UI capability. Option A (1) is the minimum, not the maximum. Understanding the 50-identity limit is crucial for developers when troubleshooting complex identity resolution issues or diagnosing potential data quality problems where IDs are merging incorrectly.

NEW QUESTION # 29

A data engineer needs to ingest batch data from a third-party customer relationship management (CRM) system into Adobe Real-Time CDP for a major holiday marketing campaign. What should the engineer check for in the initial stages of creating a manual dataflow when considering the batch ingestion framework?

- A. If the data complies with the legal aspects of Adobe Terms and Conditions
- B. If the dataset is configured to trigger the ingestion immediately after the creation of the dataflow
- C. If the file is in a supported format
- D. If the target schema is already associated with the dataset in the dataflow

Answer: C

Explanation:

When setting up a manual batch dataflow in Adobe Experience Platform, the first technical hurdle is ensuring that the source file is compatible with the platform's ingestion engine. Adobe Real-Time CDP supports specific file formats for batch ingestion, primarily Parquet and JSON. If the CRM data is exported as a CSV, the engineer must ensure it follows strict formatting rules or convert it to a supported format to prevent ingestion failures during the validation stage.

Checking the file format (Option B) is a foundational step because the ingestion service validates the file structure against the target XDM schema immediately upon upload. While the target schema must indeed be associated with the dataset (Option A), this is a step within the dataflow creation process rather than a preliminary check of the batch data itself. Option C is a legal/governance concern rather than a technical framework requirement for dataflow creation. Option D is incorrect because batch ingestion is typically scheduled or triggered manually; it is not a "trigger-on-creation" mechanism like streaming. Ensuring the file format is correct is the primary "pre-flight" check to guarantee that the mapping interface can correctly interpret the source fields for the marketing campaign data.

NEW QUESTION # 30

A retail company uses Adobe RT-CDP to manage customer data across multiple regions. To comply with local regulations, they must restrict data activation based on geographic location.

What governance feature should they implement?

- A. Role-based access control to limit user access.
- B. Static segmentation based on user preferences.
- C. Data Usage Labeling and Enforcement (DULE) policies tied to geographic data attributes.
- D. Batch activation workflows for regional data.

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 31

A financial services broker firm provides training to brokers and agencies. Based on the different trainings attended and browsed through pages, the firm would like to personalize next session visits. The firm has Adobe Experience Platform WebSDK and Target implementation.

- A. Adobe Target can be deployed through at.js, server-side, or hybrid implementation methods. The user should have access to default workspace in Target.
- B. A datastream with Adobe Target and Experience Platform configured as services is required. The user should have access to default workspace in Target.
- C. A datastream with Adobe Target and Experience Platform configured as services is required. The user need not have Approver role in Target
