- A. Usage
- B. Disposal
- C. End-of-life
- D. Procurement

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation

Disposal is the part of the asset life cycle that can cause the greatest number of issues in relation to PII exposure. PII stands for personally identifiable information, which is any data that can be used to identify a specific individual, such as name, address, phone number, email, social security number, etc. PII exposure is the unauthorized access or disclosure of PII, which can result in identity theft, fraud, or other harms to the individuals whose data is compromised. Disposal is the process of getting rid of an asset that is no longer needed or useful, such as a server, a hard drive, or a mobile device. If the disposal is not done properly, the PII stored on the asset may still be accessible or recoverable by unauthorized parties, such as hackers, thieves, or competitors. Therefore, it is important to follow best practices for secure disposal of assets that contain PII, such as wiping, encrypting, shredding, or physically destroying the data storage media

- A. Develop a plan of action
- B. Document the findings
- C. Perform a root cause analysis

- D. Escalate the issue
- E. Notify the users
- F. Scope the issue

Answer: B,E

Explanation:

The steps in the troubleshooting theory that should be performed after a solution has been implemented are document the findings and notify the users. The troubleshooting theory is a systematic process of identifying and resolving problems or issues with a system or device. The troubleshooting theory consists of several steps that can be summarized as follows:

Identify the problem: Gather information, scope the issue, establish a theory of probable cause.

Establish a plan of action: Test the theory, determine next steps, escalate if necessary.

Implement the solution: Execute the plan, verify functionality, prevent recurrence.

Document the findings: Record actions taken, outcomes achieved, lessons learned.

Notify the users: Communicate resolution status, confirm satisfaction, provide follow-up.

Documenting the findings is an important step that helps create a record of what was done and why, what worked and what didn't, and what can be improved or avoided in the future. Documenting the findings can also help with reporting, auditing, compliance, or training purposes. Notifying the users is another important step that helps inform the affected parties of what was done and how it was resolved, confirm that the problem is fixed and that they are satisfied with the outcome, and provide any follow-up instructions or recommendations.
