- B. A requirement may be understood as a representation of a stakeholder's need.
- C. The utmost goal of Requirements Engineering is to satisfy users' desires and needs.
- D. "Non-functional" is one of the three kinds of requirements.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed Explanation From Exact Extract:

In CPRE, a requirement is defined as a documented representation of a need, capability or property.

Requirements capture what stakeholders need or expect from a system rather than the system itself. Users are only one class of stakeholders; sponsors, regulators, operators and maintainers also have needs that must be represented. IREB further distinguishes three main kinds of requirements: functional requirements, quality requirements and constraints, not "technical" or "non-functional" as primary categories. Thus, treating a requirement as a documented representation of stakeholder needs is correct and aligned with the foundational definition.
