Which of the following steps must be taken to create a successful on-the-job training program?

- B. Developing lesson plans
- C. Pre-testing the participants
- D. Identifying appropriate training facilities

答案: C

問題 #77

The best way to reduce variation in products from a supplier is to

- A. develop a training plan that will improve incoming inspection results
- B. help the supplier develop quality control processes
- C. audit the supplier regularly and follow up on corrective action plans
- D. perform 100% incoming inspection

答案: B

解題說明:

Reducing variation in products from a supplier is crucial for maintaining consistent quality. While all the options listed can contribute to quality improvement, the most effective approach is to collaborate with the supplier to develop robust quality control processes. Here's why:

- * Performing 100% Incoming Inspection (Option A):
 - * Inspecting every product upon arrival is resource-intensive and time-consuming.
 - * It does not address the root cause of variation or prevent defects from occurring.
 - * It focuses on detection rather than prevention.
- * Developing a Training Plan (Option B):
 - * Training can enhance skills and awareness, but it alone may not significantly reduce variation.
 - * Training is essential, but it should complement other quality improvement efforts.
- * Auditing the Supplier (Option C):
 - * Regular audits help monitor compliance and identify issues.
 - * However, audits alone do not directly reduce variation in products.
 - * Corrective action plans are reactive and may not prevent future variation.
- * Helping the Supplier Develop Quality Control Processes (Option D):
 - * Collaborating with the supplier to establish effective quality control processes is proactive.
 - * It involves preventive measures, continuous improvement, and addressing root causes.
 - * Developing robust processes ensures consistent quality and reduces variation.

In summary, working closely with suppliers to implement quality control processes is the most effective way to reduce variation and enhance product quality¹. By doing so, both parties can achieve better outcomes and build a stronger partnership.

問題 #79

A process capability study is designed to show the

- A. capacity of a process
- B. range of variation in process
- C. cause of special effects in a process
- D. potential for errors in a process

答案: B

解題說明:

Process capability is a statistical measure of the inherent process variability of a given characteristic. It assesses how well a process can consistently produce outputs within specifications. In a process capability study, we analyze the range of variation in the process to determine its ability to meet customer requirements or engineering tolerances. By understanding this variation, we can identify whether the process is capable of producing products that meet quality standards and expectations. The study does not specifically address the potential for errors, capacity, or the cause of special effects in the process².

問題 #80

A project improvement team has identified several key issues but disagrees over the importance of certain issues. If project resources are limited and the key issues are similar, which of the following tools will help resolve the disagreement?

- A. A cause and effect diagram
- B. An affinity diagram
- C. A prioritization matrix
- D. An interrelationship digraph

答案: C

解題說明:

Detailed Explanation: A prioritization matrix is a decision-making tool that helps teams evaluate and prioritize issues based on predefined criteria, making it ideal for resolving disagreements over importance.

This approach enables limited resources to be allocated to the most critical issues. According to the BoK, prioritization matrices are valuable in quality management for focusing efforts on high-impact improvements, especially when resources are constrained.
