NEW QUESTION # 157

What are examples of primary investment objectives?

- A. Marketability and tax minimization.
- B. Marketability and growth of capital.
- C. Tax minimization and safety of principal.
- D. Growth and preservation of capital

Answer: D

Explanation:

Investment objectives are critical components of a financial plan, guiding both the client and the advisor in creating strategies to achieve desired financial outcomes. These objectives generally fall into primary categories that reflect the investor's goals, risk tolerance, and time horizon.

* Growth of Capital: This objective focuses on increasing the principal value of the investment over time.

It is particularly important for investors with long-term goals, such as retirement or funding a child's education. Growth-oriented investments typically include equities, equity mutual funds, and growth-oriented ETFs.

* Preservation of Capital: This objective ensures that the invested principal remains safe from loss, emphasizing lower-risk investments like government bonds, GICs (Guaranteed Investment Certificates), or money market instruments. Investors prioritizing this objective often have a low tolerance for risk and a shorter time horizon.

Growth and Preservation of Capital Relevance to Financial Planning By combining growth with preservation, the portfolio aims to strike a balance between generating returns and maintaining the invested capital. This dual objective is well-suited for individuals in different life stages:

* Young Investors: Tend to emphasize growth more, leveraging their long time horizons.

* Older Investors: Place greater emphasis on preservation as they near or enter retirement, prioritizing capital safety to fund living expenses.

Why A is Correct Option A explicitly combines both these objectives, aligning with a widely recognized approach to investing that balances risk and reward depending on the investor's profile and needs.

Answer: B

Explanation:

The Energy sector is one of the highest-weighted sectors in the S&P/TSX Composite Index based on market capitalization. This reflects Canada's resource-rich economy, where energy companies, including oil, gas, and related services, make up a significant portion of the market.

Other options:

- * Utilities: Have a smaller weight compared to energy.
