HashiCorp Certified: Terraform Associate (003) (HCTA0-003) Sample Questions (Q159-Q164):

NEW QUESTION # 159

You are working on some new application features and you want to spin up a copy of your production deployment to perform some quick tests. In order to avoid having to configure a new state backend, what open source Terraform feature would allow you create multiple states but still be associated with your current code?

- A. Terraform modules
- B. Terraform local values
- C. Terraform data sources
- D. None of the above
- E. Terraform workspaces

Answer: E

Explanation:

Terraform workspaces allow you to create multiple states but still be associated with your current code.

Workspaces are like "environments" (e.g. staging, production) for the same configuration. You can use workspaces to spin up a copy of your production deployment for testing purposes without having to configure a new state backend. Terraform data sources, local values, and modules are not features that allow you to create multiple states. References = Workspaces and How to Use Terraform Workspaces

NEW QUESTION # 160

When you include a module block in your configuration that references a module from the Terraform Registry, the "version" attribute is required.

- A. False
- B. True

Answer: A

Explanation:

The "version" attribute is optional when referencing a module from the Terraform Registry. If not specified, the latest version will be used, but it is often recommended to specify a version to ensure consistency across environments.

NEW QUESTION # 161

Where in your Terraform configuration do you specify a state backend?

- A. The provider block
- B. The resource block
- C. The data source block
- D. The terraform block

Answer: D

Explanation:

In Terraform, the backend configuration, which includes details about where and how state is stored, is specified within the terraform block of your configuration. This block is the correct place to define the backend type and its configuration parameters, such as the location of the state file for a local backend or the bucket details for a remote backend like S3.

Reference = This practice is outlined in Terraform's core documentation, which provides examples and guidelines on how to configure various aspects of Terraform's behavior, including state backends .

NEW QUESTION # 162

You must use different Terraform commands depending on the cloud provider you use.

- A. False
- B. True

Answer: A

Explanation:

You do not need to use different Terraform commands depending on the cloud provider you use. Terraform commands are consistent across different providers, as they operate on the Terraform configuration files and state files, not on the provider APIs directly.

From Terraform CLI Overview:

"Terraform provides a consistent CLI workflow regardless of which cloud or service you're managing." The same Terraform commands work across all providers via plugins.

NEW QUESTION # 163

Does Terraform enforce user-specific restrictions on plan files, preventing other users from applying them?

- A. False
- B. True

Answer: A

Explanation:

Detailed Explanation:

* Rationale for Correct Answer (False): Any user with access to the saved plan file (terraform plan - out=planfile) can run terraform apply planfile. Terraform does not enforce user-specific restrictions.

* Analysis of Incorrect Option:

* True: Incorrect - Terraform doesn't tie plan files to individual users.

* Key Concept: Plan files ensure predictability but are not bound to the identity of the user.
