NEW QUESTION # 18

During an investigation into a bank robbery, the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) wants to monitor the telephone calls of identified suspects in the case for a two-week period. Due to the short time frame of the investigation, the FBI does not have time to pursue judicial authorization and get a warrant for surveillance.

Which type of telephone calls is legal for the FBI to monitor under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA), given the time frame of the investigation?

- A. Calls between two U.S. citizens
- B. Calls initiated by a U.S. citizen to a non-U.S. citizen
- C. Calls between two non-U.S. citizens
- D. Calls initiated by a non-U.S. citizen to a U.S. citizen

Answer: C

Explanation:

Under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA), the FBI can monitor communications without a warrant if both parties are non-U.S. citizens and the surveillance is conducted for intelligence purposes.

However, if one or both parties are U.S. citizens, the FBI would typically require a warrant under FISA or a separate court authorization, even in a short-term investigation.

* FISA (1978) & Patriot Act (2001) - Provide legal authority for surveillance but impose restrictions on monitoring U.S. citizens.

* Fourth Amendment (Privacy Rights) - Prevents warrantless wiretapping of U.S. citizens except in national security cases.

* Snowden Leaks (2013) & Mass Surveillance Ethics - Raised concerns over the overreach of intelligence agencies in digital surveillance.

* Deontological Ethics (Right to Privacy vs. National Security) - Governments must balance security concerns with individual privacy rights.

Relevant Ethical References in Technology: Thus, the correct answer is A. Calls between two non-U.S. citizens, as FISA allows warrantless surveillance in such cases.
