NEW QUESTION # 250

In large-scale deployments, administrators often configure Security Exit programs on channels. What is the core purpose of these exits in enterprise messaging environments?

- A. To enforce authentication and authorization rules during channel establishment
- B. To automatically reroute undeliverable messages to a holding queue
- C. To provide message filtering rules that decide which subscribers receive updates
- D. To replicate administrative commands across clustered managers

Answer: A

Explanation:

Security exits are custom programs that enforce authentication and authorization during channel establishment, ensuring only trusted parties can connect to MQ.

NEW QUESTION # 251

When deploying IBM MQ in a distributed environment with multiple applications producing and consuming messages, which queue manager configuration allows for automatic load balancing of messages across multiple consumers while maintaining message order for each individual message stream?

- A. Remote queues directly connected to a central queue manager
- B. Temporary queues for each producer without clustering
- C. Single local queue with round-robin distribution manually implemented
- D. Clustered local queues with shared subscriptions

Answer: D

Explanation:

Clustering with multiple queue instances enables load balancing across consumers while maintaining order within each message stream, optimizing throughput and reliability.

NEW QUESTION # 252

A bank is transmitting sensitive payment instructions between queue managers located in two different countries. Security policies mandate encryption, authentication, and integrity of all transmitted messages without relying solely on application-level encryption. Which IBM MQ feature ensures compliance with this requirement?

- A. Segmented queues with persistence
- B. Priority messaging with authorization
- C. SSL/TLS-enabled channels with MCA security
- D. Non-persistent queues with retries

Answer: C

Explanation:

SSL/TLS-enabled channels provide end-to-end encryption, authentication, and integrity for message delivery, securing communication across networks.

NEW QUESTION # 253

In IBM MQ, when configuring message delivery for a mission-critical financial application that must maintain strict transaction integrity, which combination of features ensures that all messages are delivered once and only once, even in the event of network failure or queue manager crash?

- B. Alias queues forwarding messages without acknowledgment
- C. Persistent messages within an MQ transaction with commit control
- D. Temporary messages with retry logic

Answer: C

Explanation:

Persistent messages within a transactional unit ensure messages are not lost and are delivered exactly once. The transaction commit guarantees integrity even if failures occur.

NEW QUESTION # 254

Which of the following best describes the process of configuring IBM MQ clustering to allow multiple queue managers to communicate efficiently, including the roles of cluster sender and receiver channels, cluster repositories, and how messages are routed automatically to available queue managers to balance workload?

- A. Clustering replicates messages to all queue managers but does not provide automatic routing
- B. Clustering allows queue managers to join a cluster, share queues, and automatically route messages using cluster sender/receiver channels, with cluster repositories maintaining topology information for workload distribution
- C. Clustering only provides backup of queues and does not affect message delivery or routing
- D. Clustering requires manual routing of messages between queue managers without using channels

Answer: B

Explanation:

MQ clustering allows queue managers to automatically share queues and route messages efficiently. Cluster repositories maintain cluster topology, and sender/receiver channels handle communication and load balancing between members.
