NEW QUESTION # 170
You have SOO Windows 10 devices enrolled in Microsoft Intune.
You plan to use Exploit protection in Microsoft Intune to enable the following system settings on the devices:
* Data Execution Prevention (DEP)
* Force randomization for images (Mandatory ASlR)
You need to configure a Windows 10 device that will be used to create a template file.
Which protection areas on the device should you configure in the Windows Security app before you create the template file? To answer, drag the appropriate protection areas to the correct settings. Each protection area may be used once, more than once, or not at all. You may need to drag the split bar between panes or scroll to view content.
NOTE: Each correct selection is worth one point.

Answer:

Explanation:

Explanation:
Exploit protection is a feature that helps protect against malware that uses exploits to infect devices and spread. Exploit protection consists of many mitigations that can be applied to either the operating system or individual apps1.
To configure a Windows 10 device that will be used to create a template file for Exploit protection, you need to configure the following protection areas on the device in the Windows Security app:
* DEP: Device security. Data Execution Prevention (DEP) is a mitigation that prevents code from running in memory regions marked as non-executable. You can enable DEP system-wide or for specific apps in the Device security section of the Windows Security app1.
* Mandatory ASLR: App & browser control. Force randomization for images (Mandatory ASLR) is a mitigation that randomizes the location of executable images in memory, making it harder for attackers to predict where to inject code. You can enable Mandatory ASLR system-wide or for specific apps in the App & browser control section of the Windows Security app1.
