CompTIA Data+ Certification Exam Sample Questions (Q198-Q203):

NEW QUESTION # 198

A business unit made the following modification to the values in a table:

Which of the following data quality dimensions was applied in this scenario?

- A. Consistency
- B. Completeness
- C. Accuracy
- D. Integrity

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 199

A cereal manufacturer wants to determine whether the sugar content of its cereal has increased over the years. Which of the following is the appropriate descriptive statistic to use?

- A. Mean
- B. Percent change
- C. Frequency
- D. Variance

Answer: B

Explanation:

This is because percent change is a type of descriptive statistic that measures the relative change or difference of a variable over time, such as the sugar content of cereal over years in this case. Percent change can be used to determine whether the sugar content of cereal has increased over years by comparing the initial and final values of the sugar content, as well as calculating the ratio or proportion of the change. For example, percent change can be used to determine whether the sugar content of cereal has increased over years by finding out how much more (or less) sugar there is in cereal now than before, as well as expressing it as a fraction or a percentage of the original sugar content. The other descriptive statistics are not appropriate to use to determine whether the sugar content of cereal has increased over years. Here is why:

Frequency is a type of descriptive statistic that measures how often or how likely a value or an event occurs in a data set, such as how many times a certain sugar content appears in cereal in this case. Frequency does not measure the relative change or difference of a variable over time, but rather measures the occurrence or chance of a variable at a given time.

Variance is a type of descriptive statistic that measures how much the values in a data set vary or deviate from the mean or average of the data set, such as how much variation there is in sugar content among different cereals in this case. Variance does not measure the relative change or difference of a variable over time, but rather measures the dispersion or spread of a variable at a given time.

Mean is a type of descriptive statistic that measures the average value or central tendency of a data set, such as what is the typical sugar content of cereal in this case. Mean does not measure the relative change or difference of a variable over time, but rather measures the summary or representation of a variable at a given time.

NEW QUESTION # 200

Which of the following is a control measure for preventing a data breach?

- A. Data transmission
- B. Data retention

- C. Data encryption
- D. Data attribution

Answer: C

Explanation:

Explanation

This is because data encryption is a type of control measure that prevents a data breach, which is an unauthorized or illegal access or use of data by an external or internal party. Data encryption can prevent a data breach by protecting and securing the data using a code or a key that scrambles or transforms the data into an unreadable or incomprehensible format, which can only be decoded or restored by authorized users who have the correct code or key. For example, data encryption can prevent a data breach by encrypting the data in transit or at rest, such as when the data is sent over a network or stored in a device. The other control measures are not used for preventing a data breach. Here is why:

Data transmission is a type of process that transfers and exchanges data between different sources or systems, such as databases, cloud services, or web applications. Data transmission does not prevent a data breach, but rather exposes the data to potential risks or threats during the transfer or exchange.

However, data transmission can be made more secure and less vulnerable to a data breach by using encryption or other methods, such as authentication or authorization.

Data attribution is a type of feature or function that assigns and tracks the ownership and origin of the data, such as the creator, modifier, or source of the data. Data attribution does not prevent a data breach but rather provides information and evidence about the data provenance and history. However, data attribution can be useful for detecting and responding to a data breach by using audit logs or metadata to identify and trace any unauthorized or illegal access or use of the data.

Data retention is a type of policy or standard that specifies and regulates the storage and preservation of the data, such as the duration, location, or format of the data. Data retention does not prevent a data breach, but rather affects the availability and accessibility of the data for future use or reference.

However, data retention can be optimized and aligned with the legal and ethical requirements and standards of the industry or the organization to reduce the risk or impact of a data breach.

NEW QUESTION # 201

A JSON file is an example of:

- A. structured data.
- B. processed data.
- C. web data.
- D. machine data.

Answer: A

Explanation:

A JSON (JavaScript Object Notation) file is a text-based format for representing structured data based on JavaScript object syntax. It is commonly used for transmitting data in web applications (e.g., sending some data from the server to the client, so it can be displayed on a web page, or vice versa). JSON files are human-readable and can be interpreted by various programming languages, making them ideal for data interchange¹²³.

JSON files typically contain an array of objects, with each object representing a record with a series of name-value pairs. This structured format is both easy to understand and write by humans and easy for machines to parse and generate⁴.

NEW QUESTION # 202

Given the data below:

□
In which of the following file formats is the data presented?

- A. XML
- B. CSV
- C. RIF
- D. Xs

Answer: B

Explanation:

The data is presented in a CSV (comma-separated values) file format, which is a plain text format that stores tabular data. Each line of the file is a data record, and each record consists of one or more fields separated by commas. The first line of the file usually contains the names of the fields, also known as the header. In this case, the data has four fields: Name, Age, Gender, and Occupation. Therefore, the correct answer is B.
