Splunk Enterprise Certified Architect Sample Questions (Q67-Q72):

NEW QUESTION # 67

Which command is used for thawing the archive bucket?

- A. Splunk dbinspect
- B. Splunk collect
- C. Splunk convert
- D. Splunk rebuild

Answer: D

Explanation:

Explanation

The splunk rebuild command is used for thawing the archive bucket. Thawing is the process of restoring frozen data back to Splunk for searching. Frozen data is data that has been archived or deleted from Splunk after reaching the end of its retention period. To thaw a bucket, the user needs to copy the bucket from the archive location to the thaweddb directory under `SPLUNK_HOME/var/lib/splunk` and run the splunk rebuild command to rebuild the .tsidx files for the bucket. The splunk collect command is used for collecting diagnostic data from a Splunk instance. The splunk convert command is used for converting configuration files from one format to another. The splunk dbinspect command is used for inspecting the status and properties of the buckets in an index.

NEW QUESTION # 68

(Which of the following data sources are used for the Monitoring Console dashboards?)

- A. Splunk btool
- B. Splunk diag
- C. REST API calls
- D. metrics.log

Answer: C,D

Explanation:

According to Splunk Enterprise documentation for the Monitoring Console (MC), the data displayed in its dashboards is sourced primarily from two internal mechanisms - REST API calls and metrics.log.

The Monitoring Console (formerly known as the Distributed Management Console, or DMC) uses REST API endpoints to collect system-level information from all connected instances, such as indexer clustering status, license usage, and search head performance. These REST calls pull real-time configuration and performance data from Splunk's internal management layer (`/services/server/status`, `/services/licenser`, `/services/cluster`, `/peers`, etc.).

Additionally, the metrics.log file is one of the main data sources used by the Monitoring Console. This log records Splunk's internal performance metrics, including pipeline latency, queue sizes, indexing throughput, CPU usage, and memory statistics. Dashboards like "Indexer Performance," "Search Performance," and

"Resource Usage" are powered by searches over the `_internal` index that reference this log.

Other tools listed - such as btool (configuration troubleshooting utility) and diag (diagnostic archive generator) - are not used as runtime data sources for Monitoring Console dashboards. They assist in troubleshooting but are not actively queried by the MC.

NEW QUESTION # 69

In an existing Splunk environment, the new index buckets that are created each day are about half the size of the incoming data. Within each bucket, about 30% of the space is used for rawdata and about 70% for index files.

What additional information is needed to calculate the daily disk consumption, per indexer, if indexer clustering is implemented?

- A. Total daily indexing volume, replication factor, search factor, and number of search heads.
- B. Total daily indexing volume, number of peer nodes, replication factor, and search factor.
- C. Total daily indexing volume, number of peer nodes, and number of accelerated searches.
- D. Replication factor, search factor, number of accelerated searches, and total disk size across cluster.

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION # 70

Because Splunk indexing is read/write intensive, it is important to select the appropriate disk storage solution for each deployment. Which of the following statements is accurate about disk storage?

- A. The recommended RAID setup is RAID 10 (1 + 0).
- B. Enable NFS for storing hot and warm buckets.
- C. Virtualized environments are usually preferred over bare metal for Splunk indexers.
- D. High performance SAN should never be used.
