Appian Associate Developer Sample Questions (Q86-Q91):

NEW QUESTION # 86

You need to quickly view the structure of an application, its packages, and supporting documentation. Which Appian Designer view should you use?

- A. Deploy
- B. Monitor
- C. Explore

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 87

You configured a Custom Data Type (CDT), ACME_video. You need to set up a node in your process model to write a new video as a row in the CDT's corresponding database table.

Which set of inputs must you configure on your Write to Data Store smart service node?

- A. The data store entity and an input of type ACME_video.
- B. The data store and an input corresponding to each field of the ACME_video CDT.
- C. The data store and an input of type ACME_video.

Answer: A

Explanation:

When configuring a Write to Data Store Entity smart service node to write a new row to a CDT 's corresponding database table, you must specify the data store entity where the CDT is stored. Additionally, you need to provide an input of the type that matches the CDT, in this case, an input of type ACME_video, which will contain the data to be written to the database.

NEW QUESTION # 88

You created and published a new process model.

The process model has a start form with two synchronous subprocesses with 40 and 66 nodes each. All nodes are chained from the start node through the subprocesses to the end node. After the tasks and subprocesses, there is a second User Input Task in which the user can confirm the entries and add a comment.

When testing as a normal Acme business user, you see that the confirmation screen is not shown to you.

What might be the reason for this behavior?

- A. The second User Input Task is assigned to the process initiator.
- B. The second User Input Task is assigned to the Acme business user group.
- C. The maximum number of activity chained nodes is exceeded and breaks.

Answer: C

Explanation:

In Appian, there is a limitation on the number of activities that can be chained in a process, known as the "chaining limit." If a process model exceeds this limit, which includes synchronous subprocesses and their nodes, the process may break or not behave as expected. In this scenario, with two large subprocesses chained from start to end, the maximum number of activity chained nodes could be exceeded, resulting in the confirmation screen not being shown. Adjusting the process model to reduce chaining or using asynchronous patterns where possible can help mitigate this issue.

NEW QUESTION # 89

What are three ways to trigger a process from a process model? (Choose three.)

- A. Use a subprocess.
- B. Call a web API.
- C. Run a!startProcess() from a script task.
- D. Use a!recordActionItem().
- E. Use a Start Process smart service.

Answer: A,C,E

Explanation:

There are multiple ways to trigger a process from a process model in Appian:

* A subprocess is a process model that is called from within another process model.

* A Start Process smart service is a flow element that you can use within a process model to start another process.

NEW QUESTION # 90

A process model is currently being used to handle job applications.

For each new applicant, a User Input Task is assigned to the human resources (HR) Recruiter group for initial processing.

Later in the process, users in the HR Supervisor group are sent an email instructing them to schedule the candidate's final interview.

The process is working as expected.

Today, users in the HR Recruiter group requested that they do not receive email notifications for the initial processing of job applications. It is, however, critical for those in the HR Supervisor group to continue receiving e-mails.

How should you address this requirement?

- A. Update the HR Recruiter group settings to disable email notifications.
- B. Update the settings in the Admin Console to disable outbound email from Appian.
- C. Update the user input node in the process model to disable notifications for task assignments.

Answer: A
