NEW QUESTION # 457

Which is the single MOST important factor for introducing digital evidence into a court of law?

- A. Comprehensive logs from all servers and network devices
- B. Uninterrupted chain of custody
- C. Expert security operations witnesses
- D. Fully trained network experts to analyze systems

Answer: B

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed Explanation (250-350 words)

The EC-Council CCISO program identifies chain of custody as the most critical requirement for the admissibility of digital evidence in a court of law. Chain of custody documents who collected the evidence, how it was handled, where it was stored, and who accessed it, ensuring the evidence was not altered or tampered with.

CCISO materials emphasize that even the most compelling technical evidence can be ruled inadmissible if the chain of custody is broken or undocumented. Courts require proof that evidence integrity has been maintained from collection through presentation. Logs, expert witnesses, and analysis tools (Options B-D) are valuable, but without an uninterrupted chain of custody, they cannot be legally relied upon. CCISO guidance aligns with forensic standards used in law enforcement and regulatory investigations. Therefore, Option A is correct.

NEW QUESTION # 458

Which of the following is the MOST effective method for discovering common technical vulnerabilities within the IT environment?

- A. Reviewing system administrator logs
- B. Auditing configuration templates
- C. Checking vendor product releases
- D. Performing system scans

Answer: D

Explanation:

To effectively identify technical vulnerabilities, system scans are among the most effective methods. These scans can automatically detect security weaknesses in software, configurations, and systems. Tools like vulnerability scanners perform automated checks against databases of known vulnerabilities, ensuring comprehensive coverage across IT environments. While reviewing logs, auditing templates, and checking vendor releases contribute to overall security, scanning is both systematic and thorough in identifying vulnerabilities.
