- A. will be considered an unofficial means of communication
- B. can contain small errors that could result in Irretrievable distribution
- C. is easy to forge and alter before forwarding
- D. could be lost or delayed as a result of uncontrolabia reasons

Answer: A

In many professional contexts, email is a standard and accepted form of official communication, often used for decision-making, agreement, and other significant business processes .

NEW QUESTION # 207

Termination falls into one of two categories: for cause, also known as "Just cause," and without cause, winch of the following Issues resulting either from a professional's behavior or from outside forces could readily result in a professional being terminated for "Just cause"?

- A. Company declares bankruptcy
- B. Insubordination and insolence
- C. Company takeover
- D. Apathy and indecision

Answer: B

Explanation:

Termination "for cause" or "just cause" is generally reserved for situations involving misconduct or behavior directly attributable to the employee that negatively affects their ability to perform their job or the safety and well-being of others. Insubordination and insolence are examples of behaviors that could result in termination for cause. Bankruptcy or company takeover, however, are external forces and not linked to individual professional behavior, thus not qualifying for termination for cause.

NEW QUESTION # 208

Which of the following functions isnotpart of any of the provincial/territorial regulators' roles in administering the acts of engineering and geoscience professions?

- A. Develop the duties, procedures, and operations of their respective boards and committees
- B. Determine respective requirements for professional registration of various membership categories
- C. Oversee the use of professional stamps, seals, and permit numbers
- D. Provide formal academic training to aspiring engineers or geoscientists

Answer: D

Explanation:

Provincial/territorial regulators administer professional legislation by setting and enforcing registration requirements, regulating practice and title use, and maintaining systems for ethics, discipline, and competence assurance. This includes oversight of authentication tools such as seals/stamps and, where applicable, firm permits and permit numbers (A). Regulators also establish governance structures-council/board and committees-and define procedures and operations within the authority granted by statute and bylaws (C).

They set membership categories and requirements (licensure, members-in-training, limited licences, etc.) and specify academic, experience, examination, and continuing competence expectations (D). However, regulators do not provide formal academic training; that is the role of educational institutions (universities /colleges) and training providers. Regulators may accredit/recognize programs or set academic criteria, but they do not deliver degree education themselves. Therefore, B is the function that is not part of regulators' roles.

NEW QUESTION # 209

Tenders have been solicited for the design and construction of three large, urban infrastructure projects. All three projects are expected to commence simultaneously. Given the large scope and tight timeline for each Individual project, only three consulting firms have the experience and resources required to realistically bid and execute on any one of these projects. In response, the licensed professionals in charge of the bid process for each of the three consulting firms meet privately and orally agree on a collective bid strategy whereby each firm will be the successful bidder for one of the three projects.

- A. No because the bids were derived through collusion and illegal bid-rigging.
- B. Yes because the project scope, timelines, and limited human capital available required collaboration between firms
- C. Yes because oral bid agreements performed and witnessed by professionals are legally binding.
- D. No because bids generated by way of oral agreements are not legally binding.

Answer: A

Explanation:

The scenario described where firms collude to decide the outcome of bids for projects violates legal and ethical standards governing competitive bidding processes. Collusion and bid-rigging undermine fair competition and are illegal under most competition laws, making any agreements or bids arising from such practices invalid and subject to legal penalties. Therefore, option A is correct, emphasizing the illegality and unacceptability of such actions within professional, legal, and ethical frameworks.

NEW QUESTION # 210

A person would be committing Insider trading if the person

- A. knowingly traded based on material information undisclosed to the public
- B. gave professional advice to company insiders
- C. sold shares in a company following a news release, knowing the value of the shares would fall
- D. were an executive purchasing shares in the company that the person worked for

Answer: A

Explanation:

Insider trading occurs when a person knowingly trades based on material information that has not been disclosed to the public (Option B). This action is considered unethical and illegal because it uses confidential information for financial gain, giving an unfair advantage over other investors who do not have access to this information. Regulations typically prohibit trading based on such insider knowledge to ensure fairness and transparency in the financial markets.
