Amazon AWS Certified Solutions Architect - Professional Sample Questions (Q385-Q390):

NEW QUESTION # 385

A company is developing a gene reporting device that will collect genomic information to assist researchers with collecting large samples of data from a diverse population. The device will push 8 KB of genomic data every second to a data platform that will need to process and analyze the data and provide information back to researchers. The data platform must meet the following requirements:

* Provide near-real-time analytics of the inbound genomic data

- * Ensure the data is flexible, parallel, and durable
- * Deliver results of processing to a data warehouse

Which strategy should a solutions architect use to meet these requirements?

- A. Use Amazon Kinesis Data Firehose to collect the inbound sensor data analyze the data with Kinesis clients, and save the results to an Amazon RDS instance
- B. Use Amazon Kinesis Data Streams to collect the inbound sensor data analyze the data with Kinesis clients and save the results to an Amazon Redshift cluster using Amazon EMR
- C. Use an Amazon API Gateway to put requests into an Amazon SQS queue analyze the data with an AWS Lambda function and save the results to an Amazon Redshift cluster using Amazon EMR
- D. Use Amazon S3 to collect the inbound device data analyze the data from Amazon S3 with Kinesis and save the results to an Amazon Redshift cluster

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 387

A company wants to expand its web services from us-east-1 into ap-southeast-1. The company stores a large amount of static content on its website, and recently received complaints about slow loading speeds and the website timing out.

What should be done to meet the expansion goal while also addressing the latency and timeout issues?

- A. Use Amazon S3 to store the static content and configure an Amazon CloudFront distribution.
- B. Use an Amazon Route 53 simple routing policy to distribute cached content across three regions.
- C. Store the static content in an Amazon EBS volume in the ap-southeast-1 region and provision larger Amazon EC2 instances for the website.
- D. Store the static content in Amazon S3 and enable S3 Transfer Acceleration.

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 388

A company that provisions job boards for a seasonal workforce is seeing an increase in traffic and usage. The backend services run on a pair of Amazon EC2 instances behind an Application Load Balancer with Amazon DynamoDB as the datastore. Application read and write traffic is slow during peak seasons. Which option provides a scalable application architecture to handle peak seasons with the LEAST development effort?

- A. Use Auto Scaling groups for the backend services. Use DynamoDB auto scaling.
- B. Use Auto Scaling groups for the backend services. Use Amazon Simple Queue Service (Amazon SQS) and an AWS Lambda function to write to DynamoDB.
- C. Migrate the backend services to AWS Lambda. Configure DynamoDB to use global tables.
- D. Migrate the backend services to AWS Lambda. Increase the read and write capacity of DynamoDB.

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 389

A large company has many business units. Each business unit has multiple AWS accounts for different purposes. The CIO of the company sees that each business unit has data that would be useful to share with other parts of the company in total, there are about 10 PB of data that needs to be shared with users in 1,000 AWS accounts. The data is proprietary, so some of it should only be available to users with specific job types.

Some of the data is used for throughput of intensive workloads, such as simulations. The number of accounts changes frequently because of new initiatives, acquisitions, and divestitures.

A Solutions Architect has been asked to design a system that will allow for sharing data for use in AWS with all of the employees in the company.

Which approach will allow for secure data sharing in scalable way?

- A. Store the data in a series of Amazon S3 buckets. Create an application running in Amazon EC2 that is integrated with the company's identity provider (IdP) that authenticates users and allows them to download or upload data through the application. The application uses the business unit and job type information in the IdP to control what users can upload and download through the application. The users can access the data through the application's API.
- B. Store the data in a series of Amazon S3 buckets. Create an AWS STS token vending machine that is integrated with the company's identity provider (IdP). When a user logs in, have the token vending machine attach an IAM policy that assumes the role that limits the user's access and/or upload only the data the user is authorized to access. Users can get credentials by authenticating to the token vending machine's website or API and then use those credentials with an S3 client.
- C. Store the data in a single Amazon S3 bucket. Create an IAM role for every combination of job type and business unit that allows to appropriate read/write access based on object prefixes in the S3 bucket. The roles should have trust policies that allow the business unit's AWS accounts to assume their roles. Use IAM in each business unit's AWS account to prevent them from assuming roles for a different job type.
Users get credentials to access the data by using AssumeRole from their business unit's AWS account.
Users can then use those credentials with an S3 client.
- D. Store the data in a single Amazon S3 bucket. Write a bucket policy that uses conditions to grant read and write access where appropriate, based on each user's business unit and job type. Determine the business unit with the AWS account accessing the bucket and the job type with a prefix in the IAM user's name. Users can access data by using IAM credentials from their business unit's AWS account with an S3 client.

Answer: D
