Which type of Microsoft Exchange DAG configuration must be used to perform a backup from passive databases, unless the database has a single active copy?

- A. Passive backup
- B. Preferred backup
- C. Secondary backup
- D. Active backup

Answer: B

Explanation:

When protecting Microsoft Exchange Server Database Availability Groups (DAG), PowerProtect Data Manager allows administrators to manage how the backup load is distributed across cluster nodes.

Preferred Backup Node: The "Preferred" configuration is used to specify that the backup should prioritize a specific node, typically a passive node, to reduce the performance impact on the active node serving users.

Logic: If the preferred node is available and contains a healthy passive copy of the database, the backup is taken from there. If the database only has a single active copy (no passive copies exist or are healthy), PPDM will default to backing up that active copy to ensure data protection, regardless of the preferred setting.
