dbt Labs dbt Analytics Engineering Certification Exam Sample Questions (Q277-Q282):

NEW QUESTION # 277

You're loading fresh data from an external API. How would you implement dbt tests to ensure this feed is consistently providing up-to-date data?

- A. Create a dbt model that directly queries the API in real-time as part of the dbt test run-
- B. Write a custom test comparing the API response payload with previously captured data
- C. Test the maximum recorded timestamp in your model against the current timestamp, allowing for a small lag
- D. Use a dbt source freshness test to define acceptable thresholds for the staleness of the source.

Answer: A,C

NEW QUESTION # 278

You encounter the following source configuration in a `dbt_project.yml` file. What kind of data source does this represent?

- A. A CSV file loaded as a seed.
- B. An output from another dbt model.
- C. A raw table from your data warehouse.
- D. An external data source connected via a dbt adapter.

Answer: C

Explanation:

This configuration indicates a standard data warehouse table with a freshness check and a `loaded_at` field.

NEW QUESTION # 279

Which two configurations can be applied to a dbt test?

Choose 2 options.

- A. tags
- B. enabled
- C. `persist_docs`
- D. `materialized`
- E. `on_schema_change`

Answer: A,B

Explanation:

The correct answers are B: `tags` and C: `enabled`.

dbt tests-both generic and singular-support a limited but clearly defined set of configurations. Two of the supported configurations are `tags`, which allow grouping and selecting tests using dbt's selector syntax, and `enabled`, which can be set to true or false to control whether a test should run. These configurations are commonly used to manage large test suites, such as disabling slow tests in development or tagging tests for CI pipelines.

Option A (`on_schema_change`) is a model-only configuration and cannot be applied to tests.

Option D (`materialized`) applies only to models, not tests, since tests compile into queries that evaluate failures rather than physical objects.

Option E (`persist_docs`) applies to models and sources for documentation purposes. Tests do not support persisted documentation properties beyond what appears in test metadata.

dbt's documentation makes clear that tests inherit only a small subset of configurations compared to models- primarily `enabled`, `tags`, `severity`, and custom test arguments. Among the options provided, only `tags` and `enabled` are valid and supported.

Thus, the correct answers are B and C.

NEW QUESTION # 280

Which two statements about Exposures are true?

Choose 2 options.

- A. You can run, test, and list resources that feed into your Exposure.
- B. Exposures are defined in `.sql` files.
- C. Exposures describe a downstream use of your dbt project.
- D. Models, sources, and metrics are downstream from Exposures.
- E. Exposures are materialized in the database.

Answer: A,C

Explanation:

The correct answers are C: Exposures describe a downstream use of your dbt project and E: You can run, test, and list resources that feed into your Exposure.

Exposures in dbt are documentation constructs that describe how the outputs of your dbt project are used downstream-such as dashboards, machine learning models, applications, reporting layers, or external tools.

They exist to provide visibility into the final layer of the analytics workflow, making it easier to track lineage from raw data # models # downstream consumers.

Option C is correct because the official dbt documentation explicitly states that exposures define the downstream use cases of dbt models. They create transparency about dependencies outside the dbt DAG itself.

Option E is also correct. Using commands like `dbt ls --select +exposure:<name>` or `dbt run --select +exposure:`

`<name>`, dbt enables users to run, test, and inspect the upstream resources feeding into the exposure. This is extremely valuable for impact analysis and CI workflows.

Option A is incorrect because exposures are downstream, not upstream-meaning models feed into exposures, not the other way around.

Option B is incorrect because exposures are not materialized in the warehouse; they are metadata stored in YAML.

Option D is incorrect because exposures are defined in YAML files, not SQL files.

Thus, C and E are the correct statements.

NEW QUESTION # 281

You introduce a new data source for a dbt model. Production policies require review and approval of the source's schema before it can be used for reporting. How could you streamline this within your dbt project?

- A. Run a separate dbt project in production exclusively for source validation, providing access to relevant stakeholders.
- B. Create a pre-hook that automates schema validation and sends the output to the designated team.
- C. Write dbt tests that explicitly fail if the new source schema does not match the approved definition.
- D. Use dbt's ephemeral models feature to temporarily load the data for the approval process.

Answer: A,B,D

Explanation:

A provides proactive checks integrated into the workflow. B establishes a self-contained validation environment. D is an easy, controlled way for review. C is reactive and could potentially halt valid deployments.
