What Service Catalog feature do you use to organize items into logical groups?

- A. Sections
- B. Categories
- C. Variable sets
- D. Catalog items

Answer: B

Explanation:
In Service Catalog Management, categories are used to logically group catalog items to make navigation easier for users. Categories help organize items into meaningful sections, ensuring that users can quickly locate the services they need.
For example:
"Software Requests" can be a category containing catalog items like "Microsoft Office," "Adobe Photoshop," and "VPN Access."
"Hardware Requests" can include items like "Laptops," "Monitors," and "Keyboards." Why Are Other Options Incorrect?
A . Variable Sets □ - Variable sets are reusable groups of variables for catalog items, but they do not organize items into groups.
B . Catalog Items □ - Catalog items refer to individual service requests (e.g., "Request a Laptop"), but they are grouped using categories, not other catalog items.
C . Sections □ - Sections are used in forms to group related variables together, not for organizing catalog items.
