- B. Proof of concept
- C. Baseline
- D. Benchmark

Answer: B

Explanation:

A proof of concept (PoC) is a way to demonstrate that a new cloud feature is feasible and works as intended. A PoC is usually limited to the technical requirements of the feature and does not involve the user interface or user feedback. A PoC is used to show the customer the working result of the new cloud feature and to convince them to adopt the solution. A PoC is different from a benchmark, which is a measure of the performance or quality of a system or product. A PoC is also different from a baseline, which is a reference point or standard for comparison. A PoC is also different from a feasibility study, which is an analysis of the viability and benefits of a project or idea.

Which of the following testing techniques provides the BEST isolation for security threats?

- A. Regression
- B. Sandboxing
- C. Load
- D. Black box

Answer: B

Explanation:

Sandboxing is a testing technique that provides the best isolation for security threats. Sandboxing is a technique that creates a virtual environment that mimics the real system or application, but isolates it from the rest of the network. Sandboxing allows testers to run potentially malicious code or inputs without affecting the actual system or application, or exposing it to external attacks. Sandboxing can help testers to identify and analyze security threats, such as malware, ransomware, or zero-day exploits, without risking the integrity or availability of the real system or application. Sandboxing can also help testers to evaluate the effectiveness of security controls, such as antivirus, firewall, or encryption, in preventing or mitigating security threats.
