Archer Certified Administrator-Expert Sample Questions (Q41-Q46):

NEW QUESTION # 41

What feature in the Administration Menu allows you to troubleshoot users' record permissions?

- A. Access Control Reports
- B. Manage Users
- C. Investigate Access
- D. Admin Notifications

Answer: C

Explanation:

In the Archer security model, record-level access is determined by the complex intersection of Access Roles , Groups , and Record Permission Fields . According to the Archer Administration II curriculum, the Investigate Access tool is the primary diagnostic utility for troubleshooting "Why can't User X see Record Y?" Unlike standard reports, Investigate Access allows an administrator to select a specific user and a specific record (or application) and run a simulation. The tool then provides a detailed breakdown of the "Final Access" (Read, Update, Delete) and, crucially, explains how that access was derived. It will highlight if the user is being granted access via a specific Group, if a Record Permission field is restricting them, or if their Access Role lacks the necessary rights. This is more efficient than the Access Control Reports (Option C), which provide a broad overview of permissions but do not provide the record-specific context that

"Investigate Access" offers for pinpoint troubleshooting.

NEW QUESTION # 42

Which information is NOT logged to the Data-Driven Event Analyzer?

- A. The true or false result of each individual filter condition in the rule.
- B. Any corresponding actions that were applied as a result of the overall rule evaluating to true.
- C. The name of any rule that was evaluated.
- D. The name of the fields evaluated in each rule.

Answer: A

Explanation:

The Data-Driven Event (DDE) Analyzer is a diagnostic tool used to see why certain UI changes (like hiding a field or making it required) occurred. As taught in the Archer Administration II troubleshooting module, the Analyzer provides a high-level summary of the DDE execution path. It will show the name of the rule (Option A), the fields involved (Option B), and the actions triggered (Option C).

However, it does not provide a granular, "Boolean-level" breakdown of every individual filter condition within a complex rule. If a rule has five different conditions joined by AND/OR logic, the Analyzer will tell you if the entire rule evaluated to True or False, but it will not specify the result of each individual condition (Option D). To see that level of detail, administrators often have to simplify the rule or use "Dummy Fields" for testing. Understanding this limitation is key to effectively using the Analyzer for debugging complex conditional layouts.

NEW QUESTION # 43

You are an Archer administrator. You have an Apply Conditional Layout (CL) action that is supposed to display a Details section, but users do not see the section until they click Save. What is the probable cause of this behavior?

- A. The rule associated with this action contains a Calculated field.
- B. The rule associated with this action contains a Date field.
- C. The Details section is private.
- D. The user does not have access to a field referenced in the rule associated with this action.

Answer: A

Explanation:

This is a critical performance and behavior concept taught in Archer Administration II . Conditional Layout (CL) rules are intended to be "dynamic," meaning they should fire as the user interacts with the record (on-the-fly). However, Archer's Calculation Engine primarily runs on the server side during a "Save" event. If a CL rule depends on the value of a Calculated Field , the UI cannot determine the rule's outcome until the calculation has been processed by the database.

Consequently, the section remains hidden while the user is editing because the calculated value hasn't been updated in the current session yet. To make CL rules fire "instantly" before a save, administrators should use non-calculated fields (like Values Lists or Text fields) as the trigger. If a calculated field must be used, the behavior described-where the layout only updates after the record is committed to the database-is the expected platform limitation. Options C and D would not specifically cause a "save-only" refresh; a Date field (unless it is a calculated date) would trigger the CL rule immediately upon selection.

NEW QUESTION # 44

There are 100 records in a Data Feed target application and 20 entries in a Data Feed source file. Provided that the Delete radio button is selected on the Target Record Processing section of the Run Configuration tab, how many records will be in the target application after the Data Feed runs?

- A. 80 records will exist in the target application if the Data Feed creates new records.
- B. 100 records will exist in the target application if the Data Feed creates new records.
- C. 20 records will exist in the target application if the Data Feed creates new records.
- D. 120 records will exist in the target application if the Data Feed creates new records.

Answer: C

Explanation:

In the Data Feed Manager , the "Target Record Processing" setting on the Run Configuration tab determines how Archer handles records that are not present in the current source file. As taught in Archer Administration II , selecting the Delete radio button (often referred to as a "destructive feed" or "mirroring") instructs Archer to compare the source file to the target application.

If the feed finds records in the target application that do not match the keys provided in the source file, it will delete them. In this scenario, since there are only 20 entries in the source file, Archer will keep (or create) those 20 records and delete the remaining 80 records that were already in the system but were missing from the source. Consequently, the final count in the target application will be 20. This setting is typically used for synchronization tasks where Archer must exactly match an external "system of record."

Administrators are cautioned when using this setting, as it can lead to massive data loss if the source file is accidentally truncated or filtered incorrectly.

NEW QUESTION # 45

When executing an advanced search, some fields appear as available for selection, and some fields are automatically selected for you in the "Fields to Display" Pane. If you are looking for a field in the Available list, but do not see it, which of the following field configurations is likely to be in effect?

- A. "Make this the key field" option is selected for the field.
- B. "Make This a Searchable Field" Option is disabled for this field.
- C. "Display this field in global search results" option is enabled for the field.
- D. "Display advanced formatting options" option is enabled for the field.

Answer: B

Explanation:

In Archer, not every field created in an application is automatically indexed for searching. Within the Field Properties (General Tab), there is a checkbox titled "Searchable." As taught in Archer Administration II , if this option is unchecked, the field will be invisible to the Advanced Search tool.

This is often done by administrators to improve system performance or to hide technical "helper" fields (like those used in calculations or DDEs) that have no business value for end-user reporting. If a field is missing from the "Available" list in the search builder, the administrator must go back to the Application Builder, edit the field's properties, and ensure the "Searchable" checkbox is enabled. Option B (Key Field) would actually make the field more prominent, and Options C and D do not control the visibility of fields within the Advanced Search interface.
