NEW QUESTION # 436

A developer is containerizing an application using Docker. A local Docker alpine image has been created, and it has the image ID 'abc1d2e3f4g56789' with the tag 'dev'. The developer must make a running container based on the tagged image, with the container port 80 bound to port 8080 on the host. Which command must be used?

- A. `docker start -p 8080:80 alpine:dev`

- B. docker exec -p 8080:80 alpine:dev
- C. docker run -p 8080:80 alpine:dev
- D. docker build -p 8080:80 alpine:dev

Answer: C

Explanation:

`docker run` both creates and starts a new container from an image. The `-p 8080:80` option maps port 8080 on the host to port 80 inside the container. `alpine:dev` tells Docker to use the local Alpine image tagged "dev" (with ID `abc1d2e3f4g56789`).

`docker start` only starts an existing (stopped) container; it doesn't create a new one or accept `-p`.

`docker build` builds an image from a Dockerfile, it doesn't run containers.

`docker exec` runs a command in a running container; it's not used to create or port-bind a container.
