The KPI Institute Certified KPI Professional Exam Sample Questions (Q19-Q24):

NEW QUESTION # 19

Which of the following statements is an initiative?

- A. Processes optimized (%)
- B. Reduce operational ... (incomplete statement)
- C. CRM system implementation project
- D. None of the answers

Answer: C

Explanation:

An initiative is a specific action or project undertaken to improve performance. "CRM system implementation project" is clearly an initiative: it describes a defined piece of work with a deliverable (implement a CRM), typically with scope, timeline, and ownership. "Processes optimized (%)" is a KPI because it represents an ongoing measurable indicator of performance (assuming "optimized" is defined).

"Reduce operational ..." appears incomplete, but even when complete (e.g., "Reduce operational cost"), it would typically be an objective (desired outcome) rather than an initiative, unless phrased as a concrete project (e.g., "Implement cost reduction program"). Distinguishing objectives, KPIs, and initiatives is essential: objectives state what you want, KPIs measure progress, and initiatives are what you do to improve results. A common pitfall is listing initiatives as KPIs ("Implement CRM by date"), which leads to milestone tracking rather than ongoing performance management. In implementation planning, initiatives should be linked to the KPI(s) they influence, with clear hypotheses about expected impact.

NEW QUESTION # 20

Which of the following statements is true?

- A. Cascading objectives from organizational to departmental level can only happen by using the same objectives at the lower level
- B. Cascading stops at team level; there is no relevancy to cascade down to individual level
- C. Cascading objectives to lower levels can happen by using the same objectives and by identifying specific objectives that can support those corporate objectives
- D. None of the answers

Answer: C

Explanation:

Objective cascading ensures alignment from corporate strategy down to departments, teams, and individuals.

It does not require copying the exact same objective at every level. Instead, effective cascading can occur in two ways: (1) shared objectives where the same objective is relevant across levels (e.g., "Improve customer experience"), and (2) supporting objectives where lower-level objectives are tailored to the work that contributes to corporate outcomes (e.g., IT: "Improve system uptime," Operations: "Reduce order cycle time," both supporting customer experience). Option C reflects this best practice. Option A is too rigid and ignores the need for role-specific contribution. Option D is incorrect because individual objectives are often critical for accountability and execution, provided they are set carefully to avoid tunnel behavior. A common challenge is misalignment: teams choose local objectives that look good but don't move strategic outcomes.

Cascading should preserve a clear "line of sight," using a KPI tree or strategy map to link individual and departmental KPIs to organizational scorecard measures.

NEW QUESTION # 21

What are the most common challenges in data gathering?

- A. Timeliness and integrity
- B. Accuracy and consistency
- C. Timeliness, accuracy and data visualization
- D. Timeliness, completeness and accuracy

Answer: D

Explanation:

The most common data gathering challenges are timeliness (data arrives too late to be useful), completeness (missing records, partial submissions, incomplete fields), and accuracy (incorrect values, wrong time window, calculation errors, or faulty source data).

Option A captures this classic trio. "Integrity" and

"consistency" are important concepts but are often encompassed within accuracy/completeness when practical issues arise. "Data visualization" is not a data gathering challenge; it belongs to reporting and communication after data is collected. Addressing these challenges requires activation discipline: clear definitions, documented sources, assigned data custodians, standardized templates or automated extracts, validation checks, and an escalation process for late or missing data. Another frequent root cause is unclear ownership- multiple teams assume someone else provides the number-so RACI and a collection calendar help. KPI reliability depends on trust; if leaders don't believe the numbers, the dashboard becomes ignored. High- quality data gathering is therefore foundational to performance management, not an administrative afterthought.

NEW QUESTION # 22

Which KPI best measures the achievement of the following objective: "Improve employee skills & competencies"?

- A. Employees with performance plans in place (%)
- B. Internal customers satisfied (%)
- C. Leadership communication sessions (#)
- D. Managers satisfied with new recruits 10 weeks into the role (%)

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 23

Which KPI measures the achievement of the following objective: "Improve HR project management delivery capability"?

- A. HR initiatives on time, budget and specifications (%)
- B. HR projects (#)
- C. Main 3 HR projects implemented as planned, by 31 December
- D. Training effectiveness rating (%)

Answer: A

Explanation:

Project management delivery capability is best measured by whether projects are delivered to the core constraints: time, cost, and scope/quality. "HR initiatives on time, budget and specifications (%)" captures that directly and can be tracked across a portfolio, making it suitable for departmental dashboards and leadership scorecards. Option A (number of projects) is volume and does not indicate delivery capability.

Option C is a one-time milestone statement (initiative/goal) rather than an ongoing KPI definition. Option D (training effectiveness rating) can be a driver if HR is building capability through training, but it does not measure delivery performance itself. Measurement challenges for project KPIs include defining "on time" (baseline schedule vs revised), "on budget" (approved budget vs forecast), and "specifications" (acceptance criteria, stakeholder sign-off). Good KPI documentation should specify measurement rules, thresholds, and governance (e.g., stage-gate reporting) to prevent gaming through constant re-baselining. Balanced scorecards may also pair this KPI with benefits realization to ensure projects delivered actually create value.
