Oracle Cloud Infrastructure 2025 Multicloud Architect Professional Sample Questions (Q11-Q16):

NEW QUESTION # 11

Which operations are performed in the Azure portal to manage Oracle Database@Azure resources?

- A. Monitoring database metrics and logs using OCI services
- B. Managing database encryption keys and disaster recovery configurations
- C. Scaling up the Exadata infrastructure and running software updates
- D. Scaling up database resources and configuring database backups

Answer: C

Explanation:

In Oracle Database@Azure, the Azure portal is used to scale up Exadata infrastructure (e.g., adding compute) and run software updates, aligning with its infrastructure management role. Database-specific tasks like scaling resources or backups (Option A) and DR configurations (Option D) occur at the database level, often via OCI tools. Option B incorrectly ties OCI services to Azure monitoring. Oracle's management guide specifies these Azure portal functions.

NEW QUESTION # 12

Which task is the customer responsible for when using Oracle Database on Google Cloud?

- A. Provision Exadata VM cluster in OCI
- B. Update infrastructure and software in OCI
- C. Provision containers and pluggable databases in the Google Cloud Console
- D. Provision Exadata Infrastructure through the Google Cloud Console

Answer: C

Explanation:

Here's a breakdown of responsibilities in the Oracle Database on Google Cloud offering:

Customer Responsibility: The customer is responsible for managing the Oracle Database itself, including:

Provisioning Container Databases (CDBs) and Pluggable Databases (PDBs): This is the core database administration task that remains with the customer.

Database configuration, patching, and upgrades (within the database itself): While the underlying infrastructure is managed by Oracle and Google, the database software and its configuration are the customer's responsibility.

Data management, backups, and recovery: These standard database operations are handled by the customer.

NEW QUESTION # 13

What is the function of a NAT Gateway in an OCI VCN?

- A. To provide DNS resolution for instances within the VCN.
- B. To balance network traffic across multiple instances in a subnet.
- C. To provide a secure tunnel for connecting to on-premises networks.
- D. To allow instances in private subnets to initiate outbound connections to the internet without having public IP addresses.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Here's a breakdown of the function of a NAT Gateway in OCI:

Outbound Internet Access for Private Subnets: The primary purpose of a NAT Gateway is to enable instances in private subnets (subnets without direct internet access) to initiate outbound connections to the internet. This is crucial for tasks like downloading software updates, accessing external APIs, or connecting to other internet-based services.

No Public IP Required: Instances in private subnets using a NAT Gateway do not need to have public IP addresses assigned to them. This enhances security by preventing direct inbound connections from the internet to these instances.

NAT Functionality: The NAT Gateway performs Network Address Translation (NAT), which translates the private IP addresses of the instances to a public IP address owned by the NAT Gateway when they initiate outbound connections. When the responses come back from the internet, the NAT Gateway translates the destination IP address back to the private IP address of the originating instance.

Why the other options are incorrect:

A). To provide a secure tunnel for connecting to on-premises networks: Secure tunnels to on-premises networks are provided by VPN Connect or FastConnect, not a NAT Gateway.

C). To balance network traffic across multiple instances in a subnet: Network traffic load balancing is handled by Load Balancers, not a NAT Gateway.

D). To provide DNS resolution for instances within the VCN: DNS resolution is provided by a DNS Resolver within the VCN, not a NAT Gateway.

NEW QUESTION # 14

Which feature is supported in all Oracle Database editions in Oracle Cloud Infrastructure?

- A. In-Memory Database
- B. Data Guard
- C. Advanced Security
- D. Real Application Clusters (RAC)

Answer: A

Explanation:

The In-Memory Database feature, which accelerates analytics and mixed workloads, is supported across all Oracle Database editions in OCI (e.g., Standard, Enterprise). RAC (Option A), Data Guard (Option C), and Advanced Security (Option D) are edition-specific or require additional licensing/configurations. Oracle's database feature matrix confirms In-Memory's universal availability in OCI deployments.

NEW QUESTION # 15

Which of the following actions requires coordination with Oracle support when working with Oracle Database@Google Cloud?

- A. Applying database patches to a CDB (Container Database).
- B. Creating a new database within an existing Exadata VM Cluster.
- C. Scaling up the compute resources of an Exadata VM Cluster.
- D. Backing up a PDB (Pluggable Database) to OCI Object Storage.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Here's a breakdown:

A). Creating a new database within an existing Exadata VM Cluster: This is a standard database administration task that customers can perform themselves using SQL*Plus, SQL Developer, or other database management tools. It doesn't require Oracle support.

C). Applying database patches to a CDB (Container Database): While patching requires careful planning and execution, it's generally a customer responsibility within Oracle Database@Google Cloud. Oracle provides the patches, but the application is typically handled by the customer's database administrators.

D). Backing up a PDB (Pluggable Database) to OCI Object Storage: While OCI Object Storage might be involved, the backup operation itself is a standard database administration task that the customer performs. Configuring backups to external storage might require initial setup, but the backups themselves don't necessitate ongoing Oracle support coordination.

B). Scaling up the compute resources of an Exadata VM Cluster: Scaling compute resources (like adding more compute nodes or increasing CPU/memory) involves changes to the underlying infrastructure provided by Oracle. This requires coordination with Oracle support because it's not a self-service operation through the Google Cloud console. It's a managed infrastructure change.
