NEW QUESTION # 298

What is the purpose of Infrastructure as Code?

- A. to manually configure and manage infrastructure at scale
- B. to provide the ability of independent development process
- C. to use development engineering practices on the infrastructure
- D. to apply new practices on the development process

Answer: C

Explanation:

Infrastructure as Code (IaC) applies software development practices to infrastructure management. This approach uses code to provision and manage IT infrastructure, enabling version control, automated testing, and continuous delivery.

Automated Provisioning: IaC scripts automate the setup and configuration of infrastructure resources.

Consistency: By defining infrastructure in code, environments can be consistently reproduced across different stages (development, testing, production).

Development Practices: IaC allows infrastructure to be managed with the same tools and processes as application code, including version control and automated testing.

NEW QUESTION # 300

In which situation would an edge computing solution be used?

- A. where fast memory is needed
- B. where low latency is needed
- C. where high disk space is needed
- D. where high CPU throughput is needed

Answer: B

Explanation:

Edge computing solutions are utilized where low latency is needed. Edge computing involves processing data closer to where it is generated (at the edge of the network), which reduces the latency compared to sending data to a centralized data center for processing.

* Low Latency Needs: Edge computing is designed to provide real-time data processing and decision-making by reducing the distance data has to travel. This is crucial for applications requiring immediate data processing, such as IoT devices, autonomous vehicles, and real-time analytics.
