Splunk Cloud Certified Admin Sample Questions (Q54-Q59):

NEW QUESTION # 54

Which of the following takes place during the input phase?

- A. Splunk breaks data into individual lines.
- B. Splunk looks at the contents of the data to apply the correct source.
- C. Splunk sets the character encoding of the data.
- D. Splunk annotates data with only 3 metadata keys: host, source, and sourcetype.

Answer: C

Explanation:

During the input phase in Splunk, the system processes incoming data by first setting the character encoding of the data. This step ensures that the data is correctly interpreted by Splunk, allowing it to be parsed and processed properly later in the pipeline. Other options describe actions that occur during later phases, such as parsing and indexing.

NEW QUESTION # 55

What is the recommended method to test the onboarding of a new data source before putting it in production?

- A. Replicate Splunk deployment in a test environment.
- B. Send test data to a test index.
- C. Send data to the chance index.
- D. Send data to the associated production index.

Answer: B

Explanation:

The recommended method to test the onboarding of a new data source before putting it into production is to send test data to a test index. This approach allows you to validate data parsing, field extractions, and indexing behavior without affecting the production environment or data.

NEW QUESTION # 56

Due to internal security policies, a Splunk Cloud administrator cannot send data directly to Splunk Cloud from certain data sources. Additional parsing and API-based data sources also need to be sent to Splunk Cloud. What forwarder type should the Splunk Cloud administrator use to satisfy these requirements within their environment?

- A. Light forwarder as an intermediate forwarder
- B. Syslog-ng server with a universal forwarder
- C. Heavy forwarder as an intermediate forwarder
- D. Universal forwarder as an intermediate forwarder

Answer: C

Explanation:

A heavy forwarder is appropriate in this scenario because it can perform additional data parsing, filtering, and routing before forwarding data to Splunk Cloud. This is particularly useful for data that requires preprocessing or cannot be sent directly due to security policies.

NEW QUESTION # 57

Which Splunk component primarily performs parsing, filtering, and routing before forwarding enterprise events onward?

- A. Deployment Servers authenticate enterprise users and synchronize search-time knowledge object permissions automatically.
- B. Universal Forwarders maintain indexed searchable storage repositories across clustered cloud infrastructures continuously.
- C. Search Heads permanently archive parsed enterprise logs for distributed compliance auditing requirements globally.
- D. Heavy Forwarders process and route incoming event streams before remote indexing operations begin.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Heavy Forwarders support advanced processing tasks including parsing, filtering, and routing before forwarding events onward. Unlike Universal Forwarders, they provide full parsing capabilities but do not permanently store searchable indexed event data locally.

NEW QUESTION # 58

In Splunk terminology, what is an index?

- A. A data repository that contains raw, compressed data along with tsidx files.
- B. A data repository that contains raw, compressed data along with psidx files.
- C. A data repository that contains raw, uncompressed data along with psidx files.
- D. A data repository that contains raw, uncompressed data along with tsidx files.

Answer: A

Explanation:

In Splunk, an index is a data repository that stores both raw data and associated indexing information. Specifically, the raw data is stored in a compressed format, and the indexing information is stored in tsidx files (time series index files). These tsidx files enable fast searching and retrieval of data based on time.
