NEW QUESTION # 106

An active playbook can be configured to operate on all containers that share which attribute?

- A. Tag
- B. Artifact
- C. Severity
- D. Label

Answer: D

Explanation:

The correct answer is B because an active playbook can be configured to operate on all containers that share a label. A label is a user-defined attribute that can be applied to containers to group them by a common characteristic, such as source, type, severity, etc. Labels can be used to filter containers and trigger active playbooks based on the label value. See Splunk SOAR Documentation for more details.

In Splunk SOAR, labels are used to categorize containers (such as incidents or events) based on their characteristics or the type of security issue they represent. An active playbook can be configured to trigger on all containers that share a specific label, enabling targeted automation based on the nature of the incident.

This functionality allows for efficient and relevant playbook execution, ensuring that the automated response is tailored to the specific requirements of the container's category. Labels serve as a powerful organizational tool within SOAR, guiding the automated response framework to act on incidents that meet predefined criteria, thus streamlining the security operations process.

NEW QUESTION # 108

Which of the following is the complete list of the types of backups that are supported by Phantom?

- A. Full and incremental backups.
- B. Full, delta, and incremental backups.
- C. Full and delta backups.
- D. Full backups.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Explanation

The correct answer is D because the Splunk SOAR product supports two types of backups: full and delta. A full backup is a complete backup of the entire Splunk SOAR system, including the configuration, data, and files. A delta backup is a partial backup of the Splunk SOAR system, which only includes the changes that have occurred since the last full backup. The answer A is incorrect because the Splunk SOAR product supports more than one type of backup. The answer B is incorrect because the Splunk SOAR product does not support incremental backups, which are backups of the changes that have occurred since the last backup of any type. The answer C is incorrect because the Splunk SOAR product does not support incremental backups, which are backups of the changes that have occurred since the last backup of any type. NEW QUESTION # 109

Which of the following can be edited or deleted in the Investigation page?

- A. Approval records
- B. Action results
- C. Comments
- D. Artifact values

Answer: C

Explanation:

On the Investigation page in Splunk SOAR, users have the ability to edit or delete comments associated with an event or a container. Comments are generally used for collaboration and to provide additional context to an investigation. While action results, approval records, and artifact values are typically not editable or deletable to maintain the integrity of the investigative data, comments are more flexible and can be managed by users to reflect the current state of the investigation.

Investigation page allows you to view and edit various information and data related to an event or a case. One of the things that you can edit or delete in the Investigation page is the comments that you or other users have added to the activity feed. Comments are a way of communicating and collaborating with other users during the investigation process. You can edit or delete your own comments by clicking on the three-dot menu icon next to the comment and selecting the appropriate option. You can also reply to other users' comments by clicking on the reply icon.

- C. Within the UI: Select from the main menu Administration > Product Settings > Backup.
- D. Within the UI: Select from the main menu Administration > System Health > Backup.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation

The correct answer is B because the steps required to complete a full backup of a Splunk Phantom deployment are to first run the --backup --backup-type full command and then run the --setup command.

The --backup command creates a backup file in the /opt/phantom/backup directory. The --backup-type full option specifies that the backup file includes all the data and configuration files of the Phantom server.

The --setup command creates a configuration file that contains the encryption key and other information needed to restore the backup file. See Splunk SOAR Certified Automation Developer Track for more details.
