NEW QUESTION # 218

Which database operations can be controlled with Access Control?

Choose 2 answers

- A. Execute
- B. Query
- C. Create
- D. Update

Answer: C,D

Explanation:

In ServiceNow, Access Controls (ACLs) are used to manage permissions for various database operations on tables and their records. The primary operations that can be controlled include:

* Create:

* Description: Permission to insert new records into a table.

* Control: ACLs can be defined to allow or deny users the ability to create records based on roles, conditions, or scripts.

* Update:

* Description: Permission to modify existing records in a table.

* Control: ACLs can restrict who can update records, ensuring that only authorized users can make changes.

Other Operations:

* Read: Controls the ability to view records in a table.

* Delete: Manages the permission to remove records from a table.

Incorrect Options:

* Execute: Not a standard database operation controlled by ACLs in ServiceNow.

* Query: While querying is part of the read operation, ACLs specifically control the read access rather than the query process itself.

- A. Users can modify the appearance of the application
- B. Developers or admins can adjust behavior without altering artifacts
- C. Acts as a central landing page for the application
