NEW QUESTION # 342

You have an Azure SQL database that contains a table named factSales. FactSales contains the columns shown in the following table.

FactSales has 6 billion rows and is loaded nightly by using a batch process.

Which type of compression provides the greatest space reduction for the database?

- A. page compression
- B. row compression
- C. columnstore compression
- D. columnstore archival compression

Answer: D

Explanation:

Columnstore tables and indexes are always stored with columnstore compression. You can further reduce the size of columnstore data by configuring an additional compression called archival compression.

Note: Columnstore - The columnstore index is also logically organized as a table with rows and columns, but the data is physically stored in a column-wise data format.
