問題 #32

You are implementing Dynamics 365 Business Central Online for a company. The company is migrating from a previous version of Business Central.

The company wants to migrate historical financial information from the previous fiscal year into the new database, including all analytical information.

You need to migrate data, including analytical information, by using a configuration package.

Which three steps should you use? Each correct answer presents part of the solution.

NOTE: Each correct selection is worth one point.

- A. Select the Dimensions as Columns field. Include all the dimension fields in the configuration package.
- B. Export the configuration package.
- C. Assign a data template to the configuration package.
- D. Create a configuration package. Then select the appropriate table.
- E. Export the table from the configuration package to Microsoft Excel. Adjust the file to include dimension information. Import the updated Excel table.

答案: A,D,E

解題說明:

When migrating data (such as general ledger entries with analytical details/dimensions) into Dynamics 365 Business Central Online, the best practice is to use Configuration Packages (RapidStart Services).

Create a configuration package and select the appropriate table (A): You need to select the tables that hold historical financial information, such as G/L Entries or Ledger Entries.

Export to Excel and adjust the file (B): After exporting, you can enrich the data with dimension values or analytical information not included originally, then re-import it into BC.

Enable Dimensions as Columns (C): This makes it easier to map and load dimension values directly in the configuration package, ensuring analytical information is preserved.

Options not correct:

D (Export the configuration package): Exporting a package is usually done for backups or sharing, not part of the required migration steps.

E (Assign a data template): Data templates are used for master records (customers, vendors, items), not for migrating historical ledger entries.
