After a recent review of its insurance policies, a petroleum products company determines it needs to re-evaluate its risk exposure to potentially reduce its insurance premiums. The company has operated in two locations for 20 years but only produces and stores petroleum at one location. In doing so, the risk manager determines the following exposures:

- The number of employee workers compensation claims due to injuries while loading trucks has increased 25% in the past 12 months.
- The primary tank used for petroleum storage is 13 years old and standard life of tanks of this model is 20 years.
- There is only one road into the current petroleum storage facility.
