NEW QUESTION # 42

What is the function of a strobe light? ( )

- A. Strobe lights illuminate ambient environments and vehicles/license plates at adjustable frequencies to increase the brightness and clarity of live video images and captured images.
- B. Strobe lights are mainly used in checkpoint mode in order to illuminate vehicle interiors.
- C. Precise speed measurement
- D. Strobe lights can connect to sensors that can detect passing vehicles and transmit detection signals to the camera.

Answer: A

Explanation:

The correct answer is B. The material defines the strobe light as a lighting compensation device, stating that "Strobe light: provides light compensation at night to clearly capture license plates and pedestrians".

This directly shows that the purpose of the strobe light is to improve scene illumination so that important visual targets can be captured more clearly, especially in low-light conditions. That function most closely matches option B.

From an engineering standpoint, a strobe light is used to enhance the effective brightness of the monitored area and improve the visibility of vehicles, license plates, and other targets in both live viewing and snapshot capture. The installation notes further mention that the strobe light should be angled properly relative to the lane to avoid overexposure of license plates caused by direct illumination, which confirms that its role is optical illumination rather than sensing or speed detection. Option A is more consistent with a flash light, because the material states that "Flash light: provides strong light compensation to clearly capture targets and vehicle interiors". Options C and D describe sensor and radar-related functions, not strobe light behavior.
