- B. Timezone
- C. Boot device order
- D. The system's hostname
- E. Linux kernel version

Answer: A,C

Explanation:

Explanation

The BIOS (Basic Input/Output System) is a firmware that is stored in a ROM chip on the motherboard and is responsible for initializing the hardware and loading the bootloader. The BIOS has a setup utility that allows the user to configure various settings, such as the boot device order, the hardware configuration, the system date and time, the security options, etc. The BIOS does not store information about the Linux kernel version, the time zone, or the system's hostname, as these are part of the operating system and are not relevant for the BIOS. Explanation

The command line that will create or, in case it already exists, overwrite a file called data with the output of ls is `ls > data`. The `>` character is a redirection operator that redirects the standard output (STDOUT) of a command to a file. If the file does not exist, it will be created. If the file already exists, it will be overwritten.

The 3> character is not a valid redirection operator. The >& character is a redirection operator that redirects both standard output (STDOUT) and standard error (STDERR) of a command to a file. The >> character is a redirection operator that appends the standard output (STDOUT) of a command to a file, without overwriting the existing file contents.
