NEW QUESTION # 732

A technician recently reinstalled a previously virtualized application directly to a user's computer. Now, the application is not launching. Which of the following did the technician most likely do to cause this issue?

- A. Installed the application with administrator rights.
- B. Installed the software on the base operating system.
- C. Reset the user's application virtualization session.
- D. Installed the wrong license type.

Answer: B

Explanation:

If an application was previously running in a virtualized environment and is not launching after being installed directly on the base operating system, it's possible that the technician did not account for dependencies or configurations specific to the virtualized environment that are not present or are incompatible with the base operating system. This mismatch can prevent the application from launching properly.
