NEW QUESTION # 80

Which of the following statements are false about direct TCP offload engine (DTOE) 1.0?

- A. High latency overhead still exists using the technology, such as kernel mode interrupts, locks, system calls, and thread switching.
- B. This technology uses the polling mode, reducing the latency.
- C. This technology requires CPU to process each MAC frame, which will consume a large number of CPU resources.
- D. This technology allows to directly operate the hardware queue in the user mode, avoiding the context switching overhead.

Answer: A,C

Explanation:

The Direct TCP Offload Engine (DTOE) 1.0 is a performance optimization feature in Huawei flash storage systems. The HCIP-Storage V5.5 Training Material (Module 2: Flash Storage Technologies) explains:

"DIOE 1.0 offloads TCP processing from the CPU to dedicated hardware, reducing CPU resource consumption and latency. It operates in user mode to manage hardware queues, avoiding context switching overhead, and uses polling mode to minimize interrupt latency. Unlike traditional TCP processing, DIOE eliminates kernel mode interrupts, locks, system calls, and thread switching." Let's evaluate:

- Option A: False. DIOE offloads MAC frame processing to hardware, not the CPU, reducing CPU resource usage.
- Option B: True. The material confirms that DIOE operates in user mode, avoiding context switching.
- Option C: True. Polling mode is used to reduce latency, as stated in the material.
- Option D: False. DIOE eliminates kernel mode overheads like interrupts and system calls, contrary to the statement.

Thus, options A and D are false.
